Tobacco addicts will kick the habit today

By MARTY TRILLHAASE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — For smokers who are tired of shelling out increasing amounts of money, risking serious health problems, enduring disparaging comments from co-workers and looking for an excuse to quit, today is the day.

For the sixth consecutive year, the American Cancer Society is predicting millions of smokers will leave their cigarettes alone for 24 hours.

The cancer organization expects 18 million smokers across the country to attempt going "cold-turkey" as part of the sixth annual "Great American Smokeout." And this time, some of them just might make it for good, although many smokers are skeptical.

"Yes, I'm going to try," says a 37-year-old Twin Falls woman who has smoked since her teens. "I resent the costs of cigarettes and the lack of pleasure I get out of them any more."

But a 45-year-old Twin Falls smoker plans to ignore the event.

"It's the only vice I got," he says. "I don't chase women, and I don't drink. You got to have one vice."

Then, there's the 52-year-old smoker who says he's been getting ready to quit, but doesn't know whether he'll be ready by today.

"I don't know. I might be," he says. "But I ain't going to say."

Statewide, American Cancer Society officials estimate that some 80,000 smokers will attempt to kick the habit for 24 hours. By day's end, 50,000 of those will have kept their fingers from striking a match, and 11 days later, society officials expect 30,000 to have gone that long without lighting up.

"We have the Larry Hagman wrist-snapping rubber band, the quitter's guide and lots of information," says Kathy Williams, the area director of the Cancer Society. "That will be open all day for those who do quit."

For anyone who has smoked, the amount of effort involved in quitting can be intimidating and futile. Not only is there a physical addiction to overcome, but also years of behavioral and psychological habits.

For one thing, most people know about the program. Last year, 84 percent of the nation's adults knew of it, according to society officials.

That kind of visibility tends to attract smokers, if for no other reason than it demands no more commitment than a 24-hour break.

"People remember it, and can generally look forward to psyching themselves up for that day," Williams says.

The program relies on smokers going cold turkey, something many smokers believe themselves incapable of doing. For some, the program may offer a surprising revelation in the power of their own self-discipline.

But for others, it will offer just another disappointment.

"Naturally, cold turkey is the best way to quit if you can handle it," Williams says. "But there are a lot of people who can't, and they get discouraged."

For them, the Cancer Society recommends a gradual reduction in smoking, such as cutting down during a seven-day schedule.

"When you start to see results, it's a lot more encouraging," she says.

Among the society's tips for cutting down are:

- Restrict ready access to cigarettes.
- Change to a non-preferred brand and buy cigarettes one pack at a time.
- Seek out places and activities where smoking is either not allowed or not practicable.
- Keep track of all money saved by not buying cigarettes.

16 million do battle with the demon weed

By EILEEN OGINTZ

That's the advice from the American Cancer Society for the more than 16 million Americans who will try to stop smoking for 24 hours Thursday during the Great American Smokeout.

"It's an upbeat, good-natured effort to encourage smokers to give up cigarettes for 24 hours, if only to prove to themselves that they can," a spokesman for the group said.

Since the annual Smokeout began six years ago, the program has helped more than a million Americans to quit smoking permanently, the Cancer Society said.

Although 52 million Americans still smoke, 9 of 10 smokers surveyed say they want to quit, the society said. The idea of the Smokeout is to give those millions a little nudge and lots of encouragement.

This is how it works: Across the country, smokers are asked to make a pledge to stay away from cigarettes for 24 hours. There are signup sheets posted in offices, hospitals, banks, college campuses and factories encouraging smokers to quit.

Some companies even offer incentives. For example, the group said, Garfield Ridge Trust & Savings Bank in Chicago has invited every smoking employee to participate. Those who do will put a dollar into a pool for a drawing Friday, but only those who made it through the day without smoking will be eligible. The bank also has said there will be plenty of free juice, gum and mints to help smokers kick the nicotine habit.

The goal of the 1982 Smokeout is to get at least 1 in every 5 smokers to give up cigarettes from midnight Wednesday to midnight Thursday.

The risk of lung cancer is 10 times greater for smokers than for nonsmokers, studies show, and cigarette smoking is estimated to be related to about one-fifth of all cancer deaths.

The Tobacco Institute, the lobbying arm of the tobacco industry disputes these numbers, however, and says no link between cigarettes and cancer has been proved.

Television star Larry Hagman (better known as J.R. Ewing on the CBS show "Dallas"), the national chairman, is distributing "Larry Hagman Special Stop Smokin' Red Rubber Bands" for 1982 would-be quitters. Those taking the one-day pledge are instructed to wear the bands on their wrists and give them "a healthy snap" each time they feel like lighting up.

Last year, a society follow-up study of Smokeout participants showed that almost 7 percent still were abstaining more than 11 months later.

On Thursday, brush your teeth often, reach for sugarless gum instead of a cigarette, visit places where smoking is prohibited, and eat low-calorie, nutritional foods, the society suggested.

"Treat your body and soul with kindness. ... It will help you realize you don't need a cigarette to have a good time," the group said.

Reagan visits the frontlines of the war against drug traffic

Reagan visits the Dauntless

By STEVE NEAL
Chicago Tribune

HOMESTEAD, Fla. — President Reagan declared Wednesday that the goal of his administration's fight against illegal drug trafficking "is to break the power of the mob in America and nothing short of that."

Speaking in front of bales of confiscated drugs in a hangar at Homestead Air Force Base, Reagan announced that he soon would appoint a commission on organized crime that will conduct nationwide hearings for the next three years on "the influence an impact of organized crime throughout America."

The president said 1,000 new investigators and 200 new prosecutors would be assigned to the battle against organized crime.

"We mean to end their profits, imprison their members and cripple their organizations," Reagan said.

The president's appearance here was designed to focus national attention on the special drug task force that he established last January in South Florida. Reagan said the program "proved we have the will and resources to break up the organized crime syndicates that for too long have been a terrible blot on our history."

In an effort to curb Miami's violent crime wave, linked to the region's illegal drug trade, Reagan set up the South Florida task force last winter. Reagan claimed Wednesday that the task force has been responsible for a 27 percent increase in drug-related arrests and that more than $3 billion worth of drugs have confiscated. He added that the amount of marijuana confiscated had gone up by 35 percent and cocaine by 56 percent since his program was launched.

Some federal officials, though, have complained that the success of the South Florida project has been at the expense of other law enforcement programs. In other regions of the country, drug investigations reportedly have been stalled because of the administration's concentration on South Florida. The task force's staff of 914 was organized by temporarily reassigning anti-drug personnel from other regional offices.

"There is no question that the South Florida task force has been a clear and unqualified success," Reagan said. "This is not to say the battle is won. The influx of drugs into South Florida and other areas of the nation is still a serious problem."

Before his remarks, Reagan toured the air base and inspected equipment that is used in the drug raids, including two Cobra helicopters and an E2C Hawkeye submarine tracking aircraft. Reagan also was shown exhibits of confiscated marijuana, cocaine and counterfeit currency.

Earlier in the day, Reagan had a private briefing on the Coast Guard's offensive against drug smuggling. He also presented a citation to the commander and crew of the cutter Dauntless for their anti-drug efforts.

Tax break may come early

HOMESTEAD AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (UPI) — President Reagan said Wednesday he may ask Congress to move up the scheduled 10 percent 1983 cut in personal income tax rates to January, rather than waiting until July.

"We are talking about it," said Reagan, commenting on reports that Treasury Secretary Donald Regan has suggested the shift be proposed to the lame-duck session of Congress later this month.

"Over the long haul it would further stimulate the economy," the president said. "That's what is so appealing about it."

Officials believe the move might help spur economic recovery and lead to reduced unemployment, now at 10.4 percent.

White House counselor Edwin Meese, who accompanied the president on his visit to Florida, emphasized, however, "Reagan has not made a decision."

"The question is how much stimulus at a certain time," Meese said. "The other aspect is what would it do to the deficit by lowering receipts."

By speeding up the tax cut, government revenues would be cut, pumping up a budget deficit already expected to be more than $150 billion next year.

Under the law, a 10 percent across-the-board reduction in personal tax rates is due to take effect July 1. There was a similar cut last July, and a 5 percent reduction in October 1981.

Scientists peer into their crystal balls

By HENRY DAVID ROSSO
United Press International

WASHINGTON — The next 25 years in science will see the elimination of infectious disease as a cause of death, new sources of energy, solutions for the disposal of radioactive waste and computers that will create as well as solve problems.

Those are the predictions of 17 scientists, four of them Nobel laureates, who were asked to contribute a look into the future in their fields for the 175th anniversary of John Wiley and Sons, a scientific publisher.

Wiley asked the scientists "to ponder what might develop in their respective fields by the time of Wiley's bicentennial." The responses were collected by the publisher in a booklet entitled "Two Thousand and Seven."

"In the year 2007, I believe that infectious diseases will be eliminated as a cause of death in developed countries and that the means will be available to eliminate them in underdeveloped countries," wrote Dr. R. Gordon Douglas Jr., coauthor of "Principles and Practice of Infectious Diseases."

The book's other author, Harold G. Mandell, added, "We can predict that infectious diseases will not be eliminated by 2007."

Computer specialist Gary Brown said by the year 2007, "Computers will solve many problems, but they will cause others. In fact, their solutions to some problems may only aggravate those problems."

Brown also said many new industries will derive from the computer industry and many old industries may be revitalized by the computer.

"The final certainty about the year 2007 is that there will be more than enough computers around to do all that people want done," he said. "The big bottleneck will be in having enough trained and motivated people to tell the computers what to do."

Herbert Brown, who won the Nobel Prize in chemistry, said advances in

Cryst judgment thrown out

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (UPI) — U.S. District Judge G. Thomas Eisele Wednesday threw out a $279,000 contempt judgment against Missouri farm activist Wayne Cryts for taking 31,000 bushels of soybeans from a bankrupt grain elevator.

However, the judge said he would consider reimposing the penalty himself because Cryts was wrong to seize the soybeans.

Cryts, a Puxico, Mo., farmer, took the soybeans in July 1981 after Bankruptcy Judge Charles W. Baker of Little Rock impounded his and other farmer's grain as part of the potential assets of a bankrupt grain elevator.

Cryts refused to tell Baker who helped him in the raid or what he did with the beans.

"There is no doubt the soybeans taken by Wayne Cryts were the property of the trustee and that the taking was wrongful," said Eisele. "Nevertheless Judge Baker did not have the authority to punish Mr. Cryts for contempt as he did. The grant of that power by the Congress was unconstitutional."

Lie detector may see more use

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Pentagon has drafted an order authorizing use of lie detector tests for everything from screening job applicants to tracking down leaks to the press, it was reported Wednesday.

The Washington Post said a top Defense Department official confirmed that lie detector tests could be used more widely if the draft is adopted.

He emphasized that government workers would still have the right to refuse to take the tests. The official, who asked not to be identified, also said hundreds of Pentagon employees in particularly sensitive jobs are being asked to sign forms waiving their right to refuse to take the polygraph tests.

A 1975 directive now in effect emphasizes the polygraph should be used sparingly. It orders Pentagon executives to "preclude its use in cases other than serious criminal cases, national security investigations and highly sensitive national security access cases ...."

Amway founders deny charges

ADA, Mich. (UPI) — Founders of the Amway sales empire said Wednesday that a former employee and "certain persons in the Canadian government" prompted fraud charges against them and their company in Canada.

President Richard DeVos and Chairman Jay Van Andel, two other executives and the company's Canadian subsidiary are accused of conspiring to defraud the Canadian government of more than $28 million from 1965 to 1980.

DeVos and Van Andel founded Amway in 1959.

"Amway corporation and its executives are totally innocent of any wrongdoing and do not owe the Canadian government one cent in extra customs duties," the founders said at a news conference.

"There was no fraud, no coverup, no conspiracy to defraud Revenue Canada," said DeVos, who charged that Amway was a victim of "an anti-American trade war."

Claim revives Monroe probe

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A district attorney said Wednesday he will investigate a former medic's claim that he revived an unconscious Marilyn Monroe only to be pushed aside by a "doctor" who injected her heart with a mysterious fluid and pronounced her dead.

Deputy District Attorney Mike Carroll said a story published in the current issue of the Globe tabloid was "a very explosive bit of information" that must be checked out before he completes his investigation into Miss Monroe's drug overdose death, which was ruled a suicide 20 years ago.

In the Globe's copyright story, headlined "I Saw Marilyn Murdered," a former ambulance attendant claimed he was reviving Miss Monroe from a drug overdose on Aug. 5, 1962, when he was "pushed aside by a 'doctor' who injected a mysterious fluid directly into her heart — and quickly pronounced the actress dead."

James Hall reportedly told the tabloid he never went public with the information "because I had been warned 'important people' didn't want anyone rocking the boat.

Peru guerrillas on rampage

LIMA, Peru (UPI) — About 50 leftist guerrillas sacked a remote Andean town, dynamited the post office and the town council building, looted shops and fled, police said Wednesday.

They said the attack was carried out Tuesday night by members of the "Sendero Luminoso" — the Shining Path — an extreme left Maoist guerrilla group founded during the 1970s. No deaths or injuries were reported in the guerrilla assault.

The town, Pacayacasa, about 12 miles north of the city of Ayacucho, has been a hotbed of guerrilla activity in recent months, police said. It is located 217 miles southwest of Lima.

Police said the rebels destroyed the post office and the town council building with dynamite blasts and looted several shops before fleeing.

Canvass doesn't change results

BOISE (UPI) — The Idaho Board of Canvassers certified Wednesday the results of the November general election, and officials said there were no surprises with the final tallies.

Ben Ysursa, chief deputy in the secretary of State's office, said minor changes in the unofficial vote totals were ordered by the board, but none of the results changed the unofficial results.

"Everyone who was unofficially elected on election night now is officially elected," he said.

He said the constitutional amendments and initiatives also were certified as having passed.

Ysursa said Gov. John Evans' final margin of victory over Republican challenger Lt. Gov. Phil Batt stood at 4,208 votes after the certification. That was about 400 more than the unofficial tally had reflected, he said.

Nuclear physicist Herman Feshbach said new studies perhaps "will lead to new and effective ways of dealing with radioactive wastes." But Feshbach cautioned, "Only fools and knaves provide certain predictions with apparent confidence."

which have included the seizure of 20 ships and more than 371,000 pounds of marijuana.

In an open letter to Reagan, the Miami Herald acknowledged that the drug task force "has made a difference" but said that the wave of violent crime in the area had not subsided. The newspaper also criticized the president for his failure to follow through on his Caribbean Basin initiative, which has yet to go beyond the committee level in Congress. That initiative was aimed at helping the economies of Caribbean nations.

During his remarks, Reagan said he would make a renewed effort to win legislative aproval for the administration's anti-crime package, which includes modification of the exclusionary rule that prohibits the use of illegaly obtained evidence in the courtroom.

Utilities file WPPSS lawsuit

SEATTLE (UPI) — Eleven Washington public utilities filed suit Wednesday against the Bonneville Power Administration in an effort to shift some of the $7 billion cost of two abandoned nuclear power plants onto the federal agency.

The utility districts, which are among 88 owners of Washington Public Power Supply System plants 4 and 5, accused the BPA of breaching its power sales contracts, and of virtually forcing them to back the defunct projects.

The nuclear plants at Satsop and Hanford were abandoned in January, leaving the 88 utilities with a $7 billion bill for principal and interest over the next 30 years on $2.25 billion in construction bonds.

Attorneys said the utilities filed the lawsuit in the U.S. Claims Court in Washington, D.C., in hopes they would be relieved of their share of the debt.

Albert Malanca, a Tacoma lawyer representing the utilities, said the suit charged the BPA violated the law by signing new power sales contracts with Northwest aluminum firms and other industrial users without including provisions that would enable it to meet the energy needs of the utilities.

The BPA should have foreseen that its public utility customers would need some of the power committed to the industries, the lawsuit said.

Instead, the federal power marketing agency issued a "notice of insufficiency" in 1976 that informed the utilities it could not meet their future needs and "virtually demanded" they join in sponsoring the two nuclear plants.

Since then, Northwest power use projections have been revised drastically downward due to slower economic growth and conservation measures. The lower electrical needs, combined with skyrocketing building costs and high interest rates, forced abandonment of WPPSS 4 and 5.

The suit was filed by the Clark, Cowlitz, Gray Harbor, Mason No. 3, Okanogan, Benton, Grant, Chelan, Lewis, Pacific and Skamania County Public Utility Districts.

Factory output lowest level on record

By DENIS G. GULINO
United Press International

WASHINGTON — Recession-hobbled factories operated last month at only 68.4 percent of capacity, the lowest rate since the government began keeping records in 1948, the Federal Reserve Board reported Wednesday.

Fed analysts said they also see evidence that total production capacity is shrinking in major industries such as steel and oil.

The automobile industry slipped to an operating rate of just 49.7 percent in October, above its low for this recession of 43.7 percent set in January, but far below the more recent 61.3 percent operating rate of July, the Fed said.

Overall factory operations usually do not approach 100 percent of capacity except during war. Industries more typically produce at about 80 percent, which was the approximate operating rate in May 1981, before recession set in.

The overall October rate was 0.8 of a percentage point less than the rate for September. It was the first time the rate dipped below 69 percent, the low recorded during the most serious recession of the last decade in 1974-75.

The more volatile rate of industrial materials production, including mining and utilities, fell half a percentage point in October to 67.2 percent for the sixth successive monthly record low.

A Federal Reserve analyst who helped prepare the report but asked not to be identified said the figure represents "a pretty steep decline."

Primary processing industries, including steel and oil, saw their operating rate sink to 65.8 percent of capacity, despite a slight improvement for oil refineries.

"Now there is some suspicion that industries like iron and steel and petroleum have faced some decliner in capacity as well as capacity utilization," the analyst said. "We are working on that now."

The Fed analyzes the industries involved in primary processing twice a year to determine if they are shrinking."

The latest recession began in July, 1981, following the brief but sharp economic downturn of 1980, largely preventing economic rebuilding required in many industries.

IRA claims credit for assassination

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (UPI) — The Irish Republican Army Wednesday claimed responsibility for slaying Lennie Murphy, one of Northern Ireland's most feared Protestants nicknamed "Master Butcher" for his style of killing.

Police said they would examine the IRA claim but were "still investigating the motives."

A police source said they were exercising caution because "Murphy could quite as easily have been killed by a Protestant.

"He didn't have too many friends," the source said.

Murphy, released two months ago from the Maze Prison where he served a term for illegal weapons possession, was shot to death as he parked his car in west Belfast Tuesday night.

Claiming its gunmen staged the killing, the outlawed IRA said, "Murphy had been responsible for the horrific murders of over 20 innocent nationalists in the Belfast area."

Trading safety for regulation changes

When President Reagan was running for office in 1980, one of his occasional targets was the Consumer Product Safety Commission, a federal agency charged with monitoring the health and safety aspects of a whole range of consumer products from dangerous toys to inadequately grounded appliances.

The agency has been one of those most severely cut back under Reagan's mandate — its funding was cut 30 percent and staff dropped by 25 percent. That has left the agency with little more than a benign role in accepting complaints, looking at the most blatant abuses and asking for compliance.

The clear message to the manufacturer is that, in this area, the federal government is indeed a paper tiger with little more than wrist-slapping power. The message to the consumer is equally direct: Don't expect the government to protect you.

That philosophical change is one of the most dramatic of the Reagan approach to government. It means an important shift from government assistance to self-assistance.

We think the self-reliance Reagan's approach is trying to create is a valuable goal; but we are sobered by the fact that no change of this kind is all black or white. Thousands of Americans are killed and injured each year by defective products or by using products unwisely. To reduce our monitoring in that area is to say, in effect, that those injuries and deaths are in some sense an acceptable price we pay for the freedom from regulation.

No one should be under any illusion about that.

Viguerie trying to organize the angry

WASHINGTON — Richard Viguerie, who discovered how to make the first-class letter a mighty instrument of contemporary politics, thinks he has found another simple but effective way to shake up the political landscape.

The idea is to organize the angry. Viguerie, who has made a fortune helping conservatives raise funds with direct mail fund appeals, has decided to spearhead what he calls "the New Populist Coalition."

He launched this effort in his magazine, Conservative Digest, with a two-page manifesto calling on conservatives to take up the cause of "millions of Americans who feel that neither liberals nor conservatives, Democrats or Republicans, really care about their concerns."

Viguerie declares that "about 90 percent of our problems are caused by 1 percent of our citizens," and names his targets: big business and television executives, bankers, leaders of the National Council of Churches and the Catholic Conference of Bishops, union officials, federal employees, judges, lawyers, psychologists and media people — all of whom he identifies as "elitists" who have been "imposing their values on us."

Viguerie also provides a 10-point program that includes replacing the progressive income tax with a single rate tax with few or no deductions and exemptions, reconfirming of federal judges every 10 years, making it easier to fire incompetent or corrupt bureaucrats, stopping illegal immigration, giving tax credits for private school tuition, compensating crime victims, developing federal lands in the West, giving the president "item veto" power, ending unfair foreign competition and ending special privileges for members of Congress.

In some regards, Viguerie's platform doesn't fit his enemies list. There are judges, lawyers and shrinks who espouse crime victim compensation, bankers and businessmen who back the flat tax, federal employes who yearn for civil service reform and, certainly, churchmen who support tuition tax credits.

What that illustrates is that any effort to attach labels, good or bad, on large groups of people, is bound to collide with the fact that in this country, businessmen, bishops, television bigwigs, lawyers and union bosses do not always think or act alike.

It appears that what Viguerie wants to do is gather everyone's specific resentments under one tent and start a political party.

This is not a new idea (check U.S. history for the "Know Nothing" Party of the mid-19th century and the Populists of the 1890s), although the scope of Viguerie's proposal is so broad that his tent might split at the seams trying to shelter all those outraged folks.

He might also find that some of the very people he wants to unite in one party will shortly begin to fight among themselves, and maybe not even agree to follow Viguerie.

But even if Viguerie doesn't end up as the Moses of the New Populists, he might have found something else of value: more paying customers for his magazine.

'Too close to call' on election night in the USSR

As I predicted six months ago, Yuri Andropov became the new General Secretary of the Communist Party. But last Thursday was still one of the most exciting election nights in Russian history.

"Good evening.

"Welcome to Soviet Broadcasting System's election night coverage. I'm Dan Ratevich, and we have tonight Lesley Stahlingrad, Dmitri Brinksley, Igor Brokaw, and Ilyich Moyers, giving you latest results on exciting election for successor to Comrade Leonid Brezhnev, who just went to that great Politburo in the sky.

"Lesley, we hear you have early report from Odessa."

"I do, Dan. Odessa polls closed just two minutes ago, and the 'SBS Exit Poll' indicates big victory for Communist Party there. Odessa has always been bellwether for how rest of country will go. The big turnout for Communists in Odessa means encouraging sign for Communist Party in other parts of Union of Soviet Socialist Republics."

"Igor, how are we doing in Minsk and Smolensk?"

"How do you explain this?"

"Exit pollsters found voters very unhappy with no food in shops, shoddy consumer goods, no housing, and rotten winter. They say they voted Communist to send a message to Moscow."

"Dmitri Brinksley, how do you read these results so far?"

"Is sign Soviet people are fed up with system and want change. Our SBS breakdown shows old people are worried about social security, women don't like nuclear arms race, young people want Soviets out of Afghanistan, and factory bosses are against government regulations. It always happens in off-year election."

"Let's go to Ilyich Moyers for in-depth commentary on what this means for presidential candidates."

"We shouldn't read too much into early election results, Dan. Although it is now predicted Yuri Andropov, former head of KGB, got 99 percent of votes in his district, he still has an image problem. Andropov is household name in Soviet Union, and while everyone is still scared silly of him, he is dull speaker and has no television appeal. Konstantin Chernenko was handpicked successor by Brezhnev but is 71 years old and may be considered too young for the job.

"Moscow party boss Viktor Grishin is dark horse, and Defense Minister Ustinov has built up war chest from military which puts other candidates at big disadvantage when it come to buying television time. At the moment head of Soviet Union is still up for grabs."

"Lesley, you have new results from Ukraine."

"Yes, Dan. The Ukraine, with three percent of the votes in, is going heavily for Andropov. This is one of the places the KGB Political Action Committee concentrated on because farmers were very unhappy with Chernenko's refusal to buy enough grain from the United States."

"Dmitri, you wanted to say something?"

"I would just like to say the large dissident vote in Siberia that the Pravda News Poll had predicted didn't materialize. Despite appeals from the 'Voice of America' the dissidents stayed home, and that could account for the overwhelming sweep of the Communist Party in Dudinka, where Viktor Grishin counted on a low turnout."

"Igor, you've been watching Tashkent. Any trends there we should be aware of?"

"They seem to be having some trouble with the voting machines in Tashkent, and at the moment SBS is listing this district as the only one in the Soviet Union too close to call."

Reagan: healthy, in control, relishing the presidency

WASHINGTON -- The president of the United States is deeply concerned and sorely puzzled by the women's vote. He strongly inclines toward an increase of 5 cents a gallon in the tax on gasoline. He is non-committal on the new leadership in the Soviet Union. He has gained 10 pounds, and on that matter, at least, he is pretty well pleased with himself.

Also, in the nicest possible way, because the president is among the nicest of men, he does truly wish, without saying it in so many words, that Sen. Ernest Hollings of South Carolina would kindly shut up.

All this emerged in the course of an hour's conversation last week in the Oval Office. Mr. Reagan was lunching on clam chowder, soda crackers, carrot sticks and grapefruit. A fire pleasantly popped and crackled on the hearth. This was the day on which the Soviet Union had announced the naming of Yuri Andropov to succeed Leonid Brezhnev, but the president did not want to talk about that. "They tell me he's sharp," was all he had to say.

The president was agreeable to talking about everything else. Told that he was looking exceedingly fit, he smiled the complacent smile that all men smile under such circumstances. Several months ago he began daily 15-minute workouts in the White House gym, lifting weights and tugging on pulleys. He knew he was feeling exceptionally well, but it wasn't until he received a dismayed note from his tailor in California that he realized what the exercise was accomplishing. The tailor, watching the president on television, had noticed that the presidential lapels weren't hanging exactly right. What was going on? It turned out that the president had put on 10 pounds of muscle, increasing his weight from 180 to 190, and had added an inch and a half to his upper chest.

PRESIDENT REAGAN

This was a sorrowful message to a visiting newsman, not much inclined toward exercise, who recently had added 10 pounds of flab and an inch and a half to his waist. But so it goes.

On more cosmic matters: The Soviets had given no indication that they wished to suspend the arms control talks in Geneva, and he believed that after the Brezhnev funeral the talks would be resumed on schedule. He was hopeful that progress would be made. In that regard, Senator Hollings was not being especially helpful. The senator was saying he had enough votes to halt further work on the MX missile, and any such development would be perceived by Soviet negotiators as a weakening of our resolve. It was the prospect of an MX deployment that had brought the Soviets back to Geneva in the first place.

The Soviets, he remarked, respect strength and hold weakness in contempt. He wished that elementary truth about the Soviet Union were more widely understood. The president had gone out to the National Cathedral for an hour to hear the names of the dead of Vietnam read aloud, one by one, and he had been much moved by the experience. These 58,000 men and women had died in a noble cause, but they had died in vain for want of a will to achieve the primary purpose of war -- to defeat one's enemy.

The president's overriding purpose is to avoid war. More than anything, he wants to preserve a durable peace. He is unalterably convinced that the best of all ways to preserve peace is by rebuilding our neglected defenses. He regretted the cost of this effort, but with an upturn in the economy the cost would be bearable.

The president's visitor remarked that the president's dedication to national defense apparently had hurt him among women voters. With a sigh, Mr. Reagan said he feared this is so, and he wished it weren't so. On this general subject, the president said he had directed the Justice Department to prepare a package of executive orders and proposed legislation to eliminate remaining examples of sex discrimination at the federal level. He was thinking of a special message early in the 98th Congress.

Some months ago the president had been caught flat-footed on this subject by reporter Sarah McClendon; at the time he had not seen a report on gender-based discrimination. Well, he had seen it now. Like everything else, putting an end to sex discrimination is more complicated than it seems, but there will be action toward this end.

What about an increase in the gasoline tax? The president winced slightly at the wording of the question. We should remember that he had long advocated user fees, for airports, for waterways, for services of the Coast Guard. Our highways and bridges are deteriorating; they must be properly maintained. It makes sense to create a special fund for transportation only, to be administered both at the federal level and at the state level through block grants with few strings attached. The jobs that would be thus created would be honest jobs, not mere make-work or busywork, and while he had not made up his mind finally on the proposal, he was strongly inclined to support it.

The talk turned to economic issues. Here the president, like presidents before him, voiced a grievance against the press. CBS in particular, he remarked, seemed determined to distort the economic picture by excessive concentration on the bad news. Take unemployment: Why wasn't it made clear that 35 percent of those who are laid off find jobs within five weeks? Another 31 percent find employment within five to 15 weeks. The president understood that it was news that in the week of October 23, some 677,000 new claims for unemployment compensation were filed. But wasn't it also news that the number of persons actually claiming unemployment benefits had dropped by 12,000 in the same period?

The president was feeling upbeat on the economy. The new Job Training Partnership Act, signed into law on Oct. 13, would mark a significant beginning on the task that had to be done — the retraining of workers whose jobs had been permanently displaced by changing technology and by other market forces. The president had been following his practice of checking the "help wanted" ads in The Washington Post and The Los Angeles Times; he looked at these ads in local papers wherever he went. All kinds of jobs were available for persons with the proper training. It was only a matter of time.

Looking ahead to the 98th Congress, the president saw no reason for pessimism. With one exception, all the Southern "boll weevils" who had sought re-election had been re-elected. He could count on them for key votes, and he was confident another 20 or 30 Democrats would rally to his side on particular issues.

He hoped a truly bipartisan approach could be taken to Social Security. The first requirement would be to make certain that whatever was done, no person on Social Security received even one dollar a month less than he's receiving now. For the future, one thing that could be done -- he was making no commitments -- would be to adjust the formula by which cost-of-living increases are calculated. It isn't fair for retired workers to receive more than the wage increases going to workers in the labor force.

By this time the chowder, the crackers, the carrot sticks and the grapefruit had vanished. The fire needed another log. It was time to go. A personal observation may be in order. Over the past two years since his election, Mr. Reagan has added a couple of lines around his eyes and mouth; there is a touch of gray in that amazing head of hair, but for a man approaching 72 he appears remarkably fit. His hand is steady, his eyes reflect now a twinkle, now a glint. The president of the United States seems right on top of his world.

Soviets seek end of 'quarrel' with U.S.

By KIRSTEN O. LUNDBERG
United Press International

MOSCOW — The new Soviet leadership wants to settle the superpower "quarrel" but does not believe Moscow should make all the concessions, the Kremlin's top America watcher said Wednesday.

"We do not think that the quarrel can be ended only at the expense of our apology," said Georgi Arbatov, head of the Institute of U.S.A. and Canada and member of the Communist Party Central Committee.

Arbatov made his remarks in a panel discussion with U.S. Ambassador Arthur Hartman before an audience of 600 U.S. business executives, diplomats and Soviet trade officials.

His comments, coming two days after the funeral of the late President Leonid Brezhnev, were scrutinized for clues on what tack the new Soviet leader, Yuri Andropov, will take in dealings with the Reagan administration.

Arbatov said the Soviet leadership appreciated President Reagan's sympathy upon Brezhnev's death and the easing of restrictions on the sale of oil and gas technology.

"We very carefully watch every good gesture, every good word coming from the U.S.A.," he said. "I can assure you that no one of them would be wasted. It would be noticed and taken into account by all those who make decisions in our country."

But he said the Kremlin was cautious because it felt the Reagan administration "very nearly announced a war on us — a trade, political and economic war."

Although Brezhnev portraits hung in offices where they have been for years, all indications of mourning vanished. Flags were at full staff and all touches of black were gone.

Andropov, appointed Communist Party general secretary two days after Brezhnev died last week at 75, was shown at the Kremlin receiving various foreign dignitaries, including Cuba's Fidel Castro.

Mubarak invites Arafat for peace talks

By United Press International

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak said Wednesday he would welcome Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat to Cairo for talks on the Middle East and stressed the need to address the Palestinian issue.

Mubarak told a six-man U.S. congressional delegation that Egypt was still committed to the Camp David peace process with Israel, but that it must be broadened with the participation of other countries.

"The president indicated that he would welcome Yasser Arafat to Egypt but for the purpose of discussing the peace process," delegation leader Rep. William Hughes, D-N.J., told reporters.

Israel has been sharply critical of Egypt's attempt to help the PLO diplomatically following its expulsion from Beirut, but Egyptian officials brushed aside the Israeli objections.

Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Butros Ghali said Israeli-Egyptian relations had "no real value" unless they were linked to a larger solution of the Middle East problem.

In Lebanon, Israeli troops patrolled the strife-torn Shouf mountains east of Beirut to enforce a 2-day-old curfew and diplomats struggled to reach agreement on a date for preliminary talks on the withdrawal of Israel's forces in Lebanon.

In predominantly Moslem west Beirut, a time bomb tore through a shop off Hamra street, damaging parked cars and nearby buildings. No casualties were reported in the blast, the third in a week.

Sniper fire and sporadic explosions rang out in the Shouf mountain resort of Aley despite Israeli efforts to halt fighting between Druze Moslem and Christian militias that have killed scores of people on both sides.

Druze leaders called on the Lebanese army to assume control of the mountains and urged that peace by restored by "banning carrying arms in public, withdrawing militias from the streets of the villages to their barracks and releasing all kidnapped people."

Guerrillas elude army

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — The defense ministry said Wednesday a 6,000-man army anti-insurgency operation was unable to track down leftist guerrillas in a rugged northern province.

The rebels said they have killed or wounded 95 government soldiers in the past two days in Chalatenango province, pushing to 671 the total casualties they claim to have inflicted in five weeks of fighting with the army.

Journalists visiting San Francisco Gotera, 72 miles northeast of San Salvador, reported the International Red Cross received 52 prisoners of war Tuesday from leftist guerrillas in Morazan province.

Two lieutenants were among the prisoners, all of whom were reported in good physical condition. It was the second time the Red Cross has accepted prisoners since the offensive began Oct. 10 and leaves the rebels with only a handful of prisoners.

What's what

It's believed along Madison Avenue that humorous TV commercials can sell catfood but not dogfood. What's not understood is the why of this difference.

Question arises as to whether the current recession is responsible for any suicides. Debatable, that one. Still, researchers both at the University of Minnesota and at Williams College in Williamstown, Mass., contend between 1,200 and 1,300 such deaths can be attributed to today's economic condition.

Am told the "in" people are so described because they're either "in" hock," "in" debt, or "in" trouble.

COSTLY DOG

Q. What's the most expensive breed of dog?
A. Am told the Chinese Shar-Pei merits that distinction. At about $3,000 for a show quality specimen. Word is this sort of dog is naturally housebroken from the start. Needs no training at all to keep its quarters clean.

In South Africa's Durban Harbor is a certain giant bass which the experts thereabouts estimate to be at least 100 years old and to weigh about 770 pounds. No, they haven't weighed it, but many a fisherman has brought it close. They say it has a headful of lures that couldn't hold it.

PRINCESS DI

Q. How much does Princess Di spend on clothes now that she's married to Prince Charles?
A. About 2,500 a week, it's reported.

Most peculiar, that thing called phantom pain. Some legless men complain that their feet hurt. People with dentures have been known to suffer toothaches. The body responds to the imagination. Put a thermometer between your toes and then imagine you're sitting in front of a hot fire. The mercury will rise.

Reagan butts in bishops' arms debate

By BILL BELL
New York Daily News

WASHINGTON — In an extremely unusual move, President Reagan intervened directly and forcefully Wednesday in the already heated argument among American Roman Catholic bishops over a controversial "theology of peace" document that attacks some of the administration's nuclear policies.

Reagan asked the bishops to mute their criticism of American nuclear arms strategy and to publicly support U.S. disarmament negotiations. He timed his intervention to coincide with the resumption of debate on the document by the 285 bishops attending their annual conference.

However, several bishops said it was unlikely that the president would succeed in convincing them to dilute or delete some of the document's blunt language and conclusions. One bishop accused the White House of appealing to American Catholics over the heads of their spiritual leaders.

The seven-page letter was written for Reagan by National Security Adviser William Clark, a prominent Catholic layman, and was addressed to Archbishop Joseph Bernardin of Chicago, the chairman of the bishops committee on war and peace, which wrote the theology of peace document.

Clark repeated earlier White House accusations that parts of the 105-page document are one-sided and inadequate in its handling of the nuclear-deterrence and so-called "first strike" concepts.

"I am especially troubled," Clark said, "to find none of the serious U.S. arms control efforts, including major initiatives and ongoing U.S.-Soviet negotiations, described or even noted in the texts."

The main thrust of the White House criticism focused on the strategy of nuclear deterrence, which the bishops have condemned as immoral and irrational unless it is coupled with aggressive and serious disarmament negotiations.

Reaction to the letter among the bishops was mixed. "It was a smart move on the president's part," said Bishop Mark Hurley of Anchorage, Alaska, "but I don't think bishops are going to back off on their convictions or conclusions."

Bernardin said, "My suspicion is that there isn't much difference among us over the conclusions, but most of us will take a hard look at all the responses we receive, the president's included. The door is not closed to new ideas."

Small businesses to boost joblessness

NEW YORK (UPI) — Small businesses will cut back on employment through the end of this year, but they also are slashing prices heavily for the first time in years and this trend should continue through 1983, an industry economist said Wednesday.

"Overall the really good news for business and consumers is the outlook for inflation," William C. Dunkelberg, economist for the National Federation of Independent Business and business professor at Purdue University, said in commenting on the NFIB's quarterly business survey. "But the positive outlook is offset by a continuing decline in small business employment."

The NFIB's poll of its 500,000 members shows that, for the first time since the survey began nine years ago, more members reported they were cutting prices than raising them.

"Price cutting was widespread among our members as firms continued to cut inventories in the face of weak demand," Dunkelberg said.

The price reductions reflect a "fragile" condition for cash-hungry firms which need to move their inventories and maintain a cash flow in a last-ditch effort to stay in business, he said.

Dunkelberg added, however, that he thinks failures might have peaked. "We've lost so many firms that there are fewer handling the same market. If we get even a slight pickup in spending, it will be enough to keep them going."

The inflation outlook remains positive for 1983.

"It's hard to see any price pressures next year," he said. "Low inflation will moderate increases that are tied to the consumer price index and a lot of the major labor contracts that are already in include moderate wage increases."

A record high 20 percent of the NFIB members said they have reduced prices, while a record low 19 percent plan to hike them.

Fourteen percent of small business firms — which account for 50 percent of the nation's non-governmental employment — plan to lay off workers in the current quarter, up from 10 percent in the third quarter.

Only 9 percent of those surveyed reported job openings, the lowest level since the NFIB began the survey.

Former CIA agent guilty of charges

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (UPI) — A federal jury, deliberating only 4½ hours, convicted multimillionaire ex-CIA agent Edwin Wilson Wednesday of smuggling arms to Libya to aid Moammar Khadafy's terrorist forces.

The jury returned guilty verdicts on seven of eight counts accusing Wilson of illegally exporting four handguns and a Colt M-16 automatic rifle from the United States to Libyan intelligence and army officials.

U.S. District Judge Richard Williams scheduled sentencing for Dec. 17 on the charges, which carry penalties of up to 39 years in prison and up to $240,000 in fines.

Wilson, who has been held in lieu $60 million bond and handcuffed and shackled en route to the courtroom, showed no emotion at the verdict.

Defense attorney Herald Price Fahringer said, "Of course we will appeal."

The former clandestine agent still faces three other trials in Washington and Houston on charges of conspiracy to murder a Libyan dissident on a $1 million "hit" contract, illegally exporting 44,000 pounds of Army-controlled plastic explosives and bomb devices to Libya and recruiting former Green Beret specialists to teach terrorists in the North African country how to use them.

The case went to the jury late Tuesday, the second day of the trial in a russet brick building in this Washington suburb.

Columbia will require a few homey touches

By OLIVE TALLEY
United Press International

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Columbia's crewmen Wednesday prepared reports on their flight, including ways to make the space shuttle a better home for a crew of four, and experts began testing the craft's two faulty spacesuits.

Richard A. Colonna, head of a team trying to learn why both $2 million suits failed during preparations for a walk in orbit Monday, said investigators had given themselves a week to identify the problems.

Astronauts Vance Brand, Robert Overmyer, Joseph Allen and William Lenoir — back in Houston and recording observations while memories of their five-day satellite-launching mission were still fresh — got to work the day after touchdown.

Among the things Overmyer noted were a need for better food trays and, for astronaut Sally Ride who flies on the seventh shuttle mission next year, some kind of curtains to add a little privacy in the cramped two-room cabin.

"There's no such thing as privacy in Columbia right now," Overmyer said. But he said the craft had proved itself livable.

"We discovered a good number of things that need improvement to make it real habitable for four people, but it's nothing earthshaking," he said. "Just a lot of little things. As an example, a number of items like the food trays were just terrible to handle and kind of miserable."

Investigators said the shuttle, still at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., where it landed Tuesday, was in good shape after five missions covering more than 10 million miles in orbit.

"When it landed it did look a little more weathered and worn than on previous flights," said ground operations chief Jim Harrington. "But close-up, it's in good shape. I don't think we're going to have any great extensive work once we get back home."

Harrington said the only obvious damage was a flat tire and the loss of four of the more than 30,000 glassy insulation tiles covering Columbia's body.

He said the inboard wheel on the left-hand landing gear apparently locked when the astronauts put on the brakes, shredding one side of the tire and causing it to go flat. One goal of Columbia's flight was to brake as hard as possibly after landing.

Mother, four children die in apartment blaze

By The New York Daily News

JERSEY CITY, N.J. — As her neighbors listened helplessly to her dying screams, a pregnant mother perished along with four of her children and her live-in boyfriend Wednesday morning, when a fire blamed on an illegally installed space heater raced through their apartment.

Fire officials said the space heater had been hooked up to a sealed chimney.

The alarm was called in by Ossie "Buddy" Laurie, a neighborhood businessman who said: "I looked up and saw Myra Reeves leaning out her front window, and there were some wisps of smoke coming out," he said. "She was screaming, 'Buddy! Buddy! I need help! Please help me!'" Laurie said he put in the alarm from a nearby street box, then ran over to the house.

"She had a baby in her arms, and she was yelling my name and saying, 'Help me, help me!'" Laurie said. "I went in and ran up the stairs with my friend, Albric Glinch, but before we got to the top there was a wall of flames and heat, and we had to go back down."

Laurie ran back to the street, arriving there in time to see the woman's brother, Alvin Reeves, climb out a second-floor window and jump to the ground. Then he looked up at Myra, who continued to scream his name. "I saw a huge cloud of smoke cover her," he said, "and then she was gone."

Explosion's toll rises to 4

RAYMOND, Neb. (UPI) — Investigators searched the blackened debris of the Raymond Co-op Grain Elevator Wednesday for the cause of an explosion that killed four people and critically burned three others.

The explosion at about 3:30 p.m. Tuesday blew the roof off the wooden feed-mixing elevator.

Rescue workers pulled from the wreckage the bodies of Jo King, 42, the company bookkeeper, and Dianne Kissinger, 24, who had gone to the elevator with her husband.

The bodies of Don Elenga, an elevator employee, and Earl Nelson, a customer who was buying gloves, were found early Wednesday in the water-soaked debris.

Whiz kid cops computers, chemicals

PASADENA, Calif. (UPI) — A teenage science buff was arrested for stealing $100,000 worth of computers, chemicals, a laser and other technical equipment from Caltech to set up a laboratory in his bathroom, police said Wednesday.

The 16-year-old boy allegedly took the "incredible potpourri of material" — also including gas masks, lab coats, radios and typewriters — from the well known university during day and night raids over a period of several months.

"According to the kid, he's interested in science projects," Lt. Roger Kelley said. "When officers went to his house he was attempting to program a computer. We don't know if he knew what he was doing, but he said he was interested in science."

The youth, whose name was not released because of his age, was arrested Tuesday after police apprehended two other boys stealing equipment from Caltech during the weekend. The suspects had master keys to several laboratories and told police they obtained them from the 16-year-old.

When officers went to the youth's home in nearby Altadena to ask him about the key, they saw the stolen equipment, Kelley said. The boy told police he had found the key in a door at Caltech.

Detective Walter Brush said officers found "a whole laboratory set up in the bathroom ... There were some bottles of toxic gases, maybe flammable ones."

Police removed three truckloads of goods from the boy's home, where he lived with his mother, and turned over chemicals to the county's toxic waste disposal unit for tests.

Caltech spokesman Dennis Meredith said the chemicals were types commonly used in research such as ether and ammonia.

Kelley said the youth was often able to cart off the stolen equipment during the day without being observed because students frequently carry portable computers and lab equipment on campus.

Science is mixed blessing

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Genetic science is a "double-edged sword" that can relieve mankind of inherited diseases or abuse the poor, minorities and the unborn, theologians and medical experts told Congress Wednesday.

"While we cannot help but be excited and hopeful about the prospects that gene therapy opens up for reducing human suffering, we cannot ignore the potential dangers which come along with it," said Jonathan Beckwith, professor of microbiology and molecular genetics at Harvard University Medical School.

Beckwith told a House science and technology subcommittee genetic science can be used to enhance the quality of life, but also "has been used to oppress people and worse."

He cited the use of genetic theories by Nazi Germany in the extermination of millions of Jews, Slavs, homosexuals and mentally retarded people.

"It is this double-edged sword which must be confronted by both the scientist and the citizen in their consideration of contemporary progress in this field," Beckwith said.

The Rev. Richard McCormick, director of the Kennedy Institute of Ethics at Georgetown University, said, "When we begin to program people for certain definable characteristics, such as intelligence ... something begins to happen. A society that can begin to do that, can do terrible things."

John Fletcher, an Episcopal priest and assistant for bioethics at the National Institutes of Health, said more than 20 million Americans have or will develop inherited disorders.

"We must not resign ourselves to suffering and the harms of pain and premature death inflicted by these disorders," Fletcher said.

"Sufficient ethical wisdom now exists to use gene therapy in the best interests of persons," but "a span of 50 to 100 years" is necessary before correction of human sex genes "could serve ethically acceptable medical aims."

Roger Shinn, professor of social ethics at Union Theological Seminary in New York, said failure to obtain "informed consent" for past medical experimentation "has sometimes meant the victimization of poor people, of racial groups, of Third World populations."

McDonald's arches fall

DES PLAINES, Ill. (UPI) — McDonald's plans to abandon the place where it all started — a small burger stand with a pair of golden arches that has become a landmark in the northwest Chicago suburbs.

The 27-year-old hamburger hut will be closed next year because "we don't have enough physical space to offer modern conveniences for customers," Win Christiansen, the corporation's Chicago-area vice president said.

A new facility, to be opened in June, will be built across the street. The franchise's owners said they have not decided whether the old building will be demolished.

"I imagine some people will be upset, but I'm sure some of its immediate neighbors will be happy to see it go," said Mayor John Seltz, explaining the new restaurant will not back up against homes as the old one did.

The old building was modified substantially both inside and outside since founder Ray Kroc opened it April 15, 1955, after purchasing the McDonald's name from two brothers in California. But it lacked the seating capacity and a drive-up window that the company wants.

Customers were divided on whether it should stay or go.

Train wreck investigated

BATON ROUGE, La. (UPI) — The crew of a 101-car chemical freight train that derailed and exploded in Livingston responded well to the hazardous materials threat, an Illinois Central Gulf Railroad official testified Wednesday.

"I think they did an outstanding job," said James A. Paul. ICG transportation superintendent. But Paul admitted he would feel uncomfortable now allowing the train's crew to handle a similar job.

Paul testified on the final day of a National Transportation Safety Board hearing into the Sept. 28 derailment in which 43 cars jumped the tracks, setting off a series of explosions that forced 2,700 residents to evacuate Livingston for two weeks.

Investigators were examining allegations the engineer and brakeman were drunk at the time, and the locomotive was being operated by a clerk.

Clerk Janet Brumfield Byrd, 34, of Gonzales, La., engineer Edward Peyton Robertson Jr., 42, McComb, Miss.,; and brakeman James Russell Reeves, 31, Summit, Miss., were charged with reckless handling of hazardous wastes. They also were fired for speeding and drinking while on call.

Earlier testimony indicated Robertson and Reeves were drinking shortly before the derailment, and Miss Byrd was at the controls. Paul defended his decision not to ask for toxicology tests on crew members, saying he had no indication of alcohol use.

"We do have some good employees on this railroad," he said. "We are not going to embarass them by accusing them. I don't believe that's fair."

An attorney for an engineer's union criticized the hearing for concentrating on alcohol involvement.

Bruins get rare 2nd shot at Borah

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls Bruins marched up and looked a jinx squarely in the face three weeks ago — and backed away.

In a rarity in football, Twin Falls will have a chance to remedy that situation again, this time for much greater stakes.

Twin Falls, which took a 17-0 lead into the fourth-quarter of a regular-season game against Borah and wound up losing for the 21st time, visits Bronco Stadium at 1 p.m. Saturday against those same Lions. This time, the winner moves on to play for the Idaho State A-1 Football Championship.

Although it is a rematch, the game is not easily defined in black and white. For instance, only once — after recovering a fumble at its own 38 — did Twin Falls march across Borah's side of the 50-yard line. That was late in the half and penetrated only eight yards beyond midfield. That indicates Borah's defense stifled Twin Falls.

However, Twin Falls did move the ball twice for touchdowns after turnovers in Borah territory. Those drives were 38 and 42 yards. Although it can be said miscues set the scoring up, still the Bruins had to put together pretty good drives to capitalize on them.

The other Twin Falls' score, a field goal by Brent Standing, came after a fumble recovery at the Borah 27 in the second half. The Bruins couldn't move the ball that time.

On the other side of the ball, Borah's offense was stymied three times in Twin Falls territory in the first half, indicating that Twin Falls' defense wasn't performing as well as the 14-0 halftime score might mean.

Throughout the night, the Bruins had trouble containing Borah's sweeps out of the shotgun or stacked I single wing. Ty Ogata swept the ends frequently. But Borah knows the one secret that Twin Falls has feared all year — the Bruins are very vulnerable to deep passes over the middle. Other teams have found that — and then, to the relief of the coaching staff, have gone away from it.

Borah exploded two bombs in the final quarter to win that first meeting.

It is understood by all participants, however, that Twin Falls' fourth-quarter showing was a collapse of the first magnitude.

"I think, though," said Coach Bill Jones, "that that game did provide a lesson to our young men. Our last two games have been very heady games. And we as coaches learned from Borah, too. We can't go to a defensive set and stay with it. Offensively, we can't get too conservative."

One help will be "we're at full strength in our defensive secondary. We lost (safety) Mike Ulrich in the second quarter and some other of our people weren't at full speed. We were on defense virtually all the time in the third and fourth quarters, too. This time we're healthy and we hope that means we can substitute throughout the game and keep our people fresher," Jones said.

But Jones isn't expecting a complete rematch with the Lions.

"That Dee (Borah Coach Dee Pankratz) is amazing," Jones said. "We've played him once and we have scouting films of three other Borah games. He used a different concept in every game."

Jones said the Bruins defense will attack the shotgun sweep differently this time but the presence of Borah wide receiver Scott Fitzgerald makes the answer to Borah's passing game more difficult.

"To be successful against their deep passing you about have to double cover Fitzgerald. He caught the key fourth-down pass and one touchdown against us and the game breakers against Meridian and Boise. When you double cover him, well, you saw what happens," Jones said. Fitzgerald was double covered when Borah quarterback Steve Buratto went to the other receivers

Coaches feel unit will have to be next to perfect against Borah

TWIN FALLS — If you're a Twin Falls football fanatic, names like Virgil Hurt, Corky Federico and Scott Morgan are not new. They're the runners who score the touchdowns; the glory guys.

For every touchdown the Bruins have scored and for every yard the team has gained, the unknown linemen have done their job.

Players like Bob Burwell, Greg Snow, D.W. Lindsey, Randy Masoner, Mike Erke and Lanning Morrison don't make the headlines or get their name mentioned over the airwaves often.

"It's not so much the quality of the players, but our line's quickness and desire that has us so far ahead compared to past teams," Twin Falls head Coach Bill Jones said.

Morrison, at 6-5 and 205 pounds is the biggest starter, while Erke, the only non-senior in the starting group, mans the left guard spot despite being just 5-11 and 160 pounds.

"The guys have improved their blocking technique and they use their quickness well," Barron, in his sixth season of coaching the line, said. "These kids are good athletes because they are hard workers. I've said this before, but this is the best bunch of linemen I've had at this school.

"When Corky or Scott or Virgil score, they really feel that they've been a part of that touchdown," he said. "They've developed a lot of pride in busting those holes open and springing those backs loose."

Barron said the line has progressed dramatically during the long and successful season.

"The Mountain Home game was probably their best game," Barron said. "I look at the films mainly for blocking technique and although we had some breakdowns last week, I was very pleased with the technique. The players were coming off the ball together, getting their hips through and delivering a blow to their man."

Perfection is what any football player strives for and Barron says his line hasn't hit it yet, but will need to be close to that lofty goal come Saturday.

"We'll have to be more or less perfect to beat Borah," he said.

The Lions, Jones said, present special problems for the Bruins.

"Borah moves so much on defense as you snap the ball that you have to be ready," the head skipper said. "Borah's defense is basically a gambling defense. They'll give you two or three places to run on a given play to stack up the place they think you're going to go. If you guess right, you can break some long runs and that's why we had some big plays the last time we played them . . . we guessed right."

The Bruins go into the Borah game with the advantage of just having played the Lions four weeks ago. Barron was pleased with his line's performance in that game until eight minutes remained. That's when the Lions rallied from a 17-0 deficit for a 19-17 win.

"We moved the ball pretty consistently all night, but we had a breakdown at that point," Barron admitted. "The offense just couldn't move the ball."

Barron hinted that the inability to move the ball may have been his line's fault, but Jones doesn't put the blame there.

"The panic started in the backfield and spread to the line and to the whole team," the head skipper said.

Staying calm may be the best plan of attack for the Bruins.

"We have confidence going up there again," Barron said. "We moved the ball on them for three quarters. But Borah has that long winning tradition . . . they never give up until the game is over and even then they may still not give up."

Barron says it will take that type of commitment to win Saturday. He'd love to see the Bruins take the opening kickoff and move the ball in a sustained drive for a touchdown.

"Oh, would that give this line a big lift," he said.

The coaches have reason to believe that panic may not affect the Bruins Saturday.

"We faced the same situation at Blackfoot the last week of the season when they jumped out to a lead," Barron said. "But these guys gutted it out and stayed in there. They didn't panic and we moved the ball in the second half and won the game. I think their performance was something this town hasn't seen in quite a while."

Jones, for one, would like to practice on Thanksgiving Day and then go out to Bruin Stadium two days later and play for the state championship.

"My wife's cooking isn't all that great," he said jokingly.

— "Seriously, we're taking this thing one game at a time and trying to downplay each game. If we beat Borah, then we get the home game for the championship," Jones said, pointing to Bruin Stadium. "And we'll play it right here in a blinding snowstorm if we have to."

What players finally received

NEW YORK (UPI) — The basic ingredients of the NFL Management Council's agreement with the NFL Players Association.

• Players receive a total of $1.6 billion over five years with $240 million paid in 1983, $260 million in 1984, $290 million in 1985 and $320 million in 1986.

• Players win $60 million in bonus money with rookies getting $10,000, second-year players $20,000, third-year $30,000 and players with four years experience or more $60,000.

• Players earn substantially higher minimum salaries and improved benefits, including major medical coverage increased from $250,000 per player to $1 million.

• Players obtain a minimum wage scale, calling for $30,000 for a rookie in 1982, $40,000 in 1983-84 and $50,000 in 1985-86. A maximum salary established at $200,000 for any player beginning in 1983.

• A second-year player would earn $5,000 in severance pay, a third-year player $20,000, a fourth-year player $60,000 with increments of $10,000 for each additional year.

Teams unanimously OK pact

NEW YORK (UPI) — The 28 NFL teams Wednesday night unanimously ratified the previous day's collective bargaining agreement which ended the 57-day players' strike.

The 1,500-member rank-and-file of the NFL Players Association are to vote on the five-year $1.6 billion agreement by secret ballot next Tuesday. A majority decision is needed and ratification is expected.

Chuck Sullivan, president of the New England Patriots and a member of the Management Council's executive committee, said he hoped the settlement would mark a "new era of labor cooperation."

"We hope that the end of this bad story is the beginning of a good story," he said. "It's been a long struggle. We're glad it's come to an end."

Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, said he expected the union to join the owners in ratifying the pact.

"I think the 19-6 player rep vote is indicative that the players recognize there is a lot of money out there and they are willing to play ball," Donlan said.

The only snag in the owners' ratification was overcome earlier in the evening when the New York Jets agreed to open camp Thursday. Only the Detroit Lions and Jets failed to work out Wednesday in preparation for the resumption of the season Sunday. The Lions voted not to report to practice or play a game until they met with player representative Stan White and heard terms of the settlement.

A spokesman for the Jets said the club would end the lockout Thursday "based on the fact that representatives from the NFL Management Council are flying to Washington to execute the document with representatives of the NFL Players Association."

Jets president Jim Kensil, a member of the six-member executive council, had cautioned that the strike was not officially over until both sides signed the contract. He said the Management Council was prepared to do so Wednesday but Ed Garvey, director of the NFLPA, was holding off for another day on signing.

Sullivan said Garvey is expected to sign the agreement Thursday in Washington.

Paul Martha, a lawyer and former player who served as an intermediary in the negotiations, attributed the delay to technicalities in the language of the contract.

Following the owners' ratification, NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle held a meeting in his office to discuss implications of the shortened season. The major changes include increasing the active roster from 45 to 49 players and adding an extra week of the regular season to be played Jan. 2-3.

The new schedule calls for a nine-game season followed by playoffs involving the 16 teams with the best records, eight from each conference. The playoffs would begin Jan. 9 and lead to the Super Bowl, which will be played Jan. 30 at Pasadena, Calif., as scheduled.

Rozelle said the extra week would guarantee each team of playing at least four home games. The league also announced the pairings of the makeup date in the first week of January.

It is estimated that the strike, which wiped out seven games, cost management and players nearly $275 million.

Many of the NFL players were not happy with the agreement reached late Tuesday night.

"It's like the fall of France in 1940," said Marvin Powell, player representative of the Jets.

The owners said the NFLPA negotiated a good contract but added a settlement could have been reached earlier.

"I think they (the NFLPA) exercised poor judgment at the bargaining table," said Giants owner Wellington Mara. "The players came out with an excellent agreement but they could have come out with the same thing two months ago. The whole thing changed when the union leaders changed their ideology."

Houston Oilers coach Ed Biles said the long layoff will be apparent in Sunday's games.

"It's going to be fun," he said. "There'll be mistakes and missed assignments and probably more touchdowns scored, but it'll be exciting."

The rats all survived — unfortunately

By RANDY GALLOWAY

Commentary

ED GARVEY
Backed into a corner

When survival instincts became paramount in the NFL strike, when it was finally fourth down and nowhere else to go, all the rats were forced to swim back to their sinking ship.

Unfortunately, they made it.

This boat will float again, with Captain Pete Rozelle returning to the wheel. And as Pete's Creeps try to sail back into the good graces of ticket buyers and Nielsen families, let us pause to remember that this strike was not a case of right vs. wrong.

Oh, there was a time and place where the players had the most legitimate gripe. When a plantation boss like Tex Schramm insists on giving a bat boy's salary of $110,000 a year to a 10-season veteran of All-Pro status such as Billy Joe Dupree, then he's asking for trouble. And he deserves to get it.

But Ed Garvey came along and took a plunge off the deep end with 55-percent-of-the-gross demands. Circle the wagons, boys, we're surrounded by idiots.

Obviously, there are those who deserve special mention, astute leaders from both sides who, in the span of eight weeks, managed to alienate everyone they came in contact with. Names that must be included on this roll call of large rodents are these:

Jack Donlan — So you're a jogger, huh, Jack? Good. Get a running start out of town. May the owners' hired gun disappear forever back into the corporate world cesspool from which he came. May the next strike he tries to break be against New Jersey longshoremen. Who know where he lives. And when he goes out alone.

Ed Garvey — Take a long vacation. Ed. Leave tomorrow. Don't ever come back. Visit El Salvador, then stop over in West Beirut. Don't miss Poland, either. Just tell the border guards you're a VIP in the union. They'll take good care of you.

Gene Upshaw — Where is Jack Tatum when you really need him?

Pete Rozelle — The only positive point to emerge from the last eight weeks is that the commissioner was exposed as a fraud. All these years he paraded around the NFL, creating an image as the powerful Mr. Wonderful of pro sports. Al Davis bruised him pretty good in a courtroom over the summer, but it was the strike that knocked Rozelle to his knees. Of all the figures involved in this mess, Rozelle took the biggest fall. He came off looking like Barney Fife. There were no bullets in Pete's gun either. The owners told their houseboy to keep quiet, and he did so without a whimper.

Now that the honor roll of rats is out of the way, the next question is who won and lost in this little debate.

The unanimous opinion of neutral observers Tuesday night was that once the full terms of the agreement are announced, the owners will have a victory of large proportions.

Garvey backed himself into a negotiating corner by not leaving an escape hatch. The percentage of the gross and the precentage of the TV revenue were never negotiable with the owners. Garvey spent all this time throwing eggs at a wall.

Look at the big picture, if you really care, and it shows us that Garvey should have gone to school on Marvin Miller, the baseball players' man. Free agency was the best tire-tool to swing at the owners. That's where Garvey's last stand needed to come. Free agency would have brought the kind of money he was seeking in those silly percentage of the gross demands. The NFL owners fear free agency, and they machine-gunned Garvey on that issue in 1974. But it's a proven mistake that he blew the strike, and most likely his job, by not saddling up free agency and riding it again.

There will be an increase in salaries for players, but under the terms of the new agreement, the owners are still not forced to pay the top dollar. In other words, the players remain under a large thumb and it will be years before some of them can recoup the money lost during this strike.

And then there's the emergency playoff plan for the remainder of the season. How about 16 out of 28 teams making the playoffs and competing in something called "The Super Bowl Tournament?"

The only thing missing from this brainstorm is Joanie Weston and the Bay Area Bombers. When you borrow something from the Roller Derby, why not let the real thing play?

Some not totally sure it will pass

Reps lukewarm on agreement

By JENNY KELLNER
New York Daily News

NEW YORK — If Giants' player representative Beasley Reece isn't too excited about the terms of the NFL strike settlement, Jets' player rep Marvin Powell is downright gloomy.

"It's like the fall of France in 1940," said Powell.

In fact, few of the player representatives were totally pleased with the terms of the five-year, $1.6 billion agreement, which was part of the reason for sending it down to the rank-and-file without a recommendation. And while the concept behind that was to let rest of the players view it "objectively," some thought that they might even reject the settlement next Tuesday, when each team will vote.

"I think it will pass, but I'm not sure," said Reece. "The Giants went out on strike for higher wages and we didn't get that."

"Until the body accepts it, it's still a tentative agreement," said Mike Ozdowski of the Colts.

"There is a possibility they may say they don't like it," said Tom Condon, the Chiefs' rep who is on the executive committee.

"The acid test is when you send it out to the membership," said Dan Jiggetts of the Bears. "Look at Chrysler and the UAW."

In that case, said Stan White of the Lions, the players have three options.

"We could send it to binding arbitration and continue to play, or we could go back to the table and continue to play," said White. "Or we could go back out on strike.

"There will be some unhappy people," added White. "I'm not totally happy with the package and personally would not accept it. But you have to look at the total circumstances. A lot more players would be affected if we did not play this year. The compromises came down at the point of no return. The players made a correct decision in taking the package at this time. It's conceivable that the players will reject it."

Still, most agreed that going out on strike was worthwhile — and were looking forward to getting back to work.

"I think we took a major step in making ourselves a union that is strong enough to take collective action," said White. "As far as playing Sunday goes, I think we're in better shape than we were going into training camp. Then we had six months off. This time we had eight weeks off and everyone was aware there could be football at any time."

"We learned a lot," said Reece. "And one of the most important things the players learned was that you can't count on football. Most people learn that only when they're cut. We learned that lesson without it. I'm happy for all the players. Now, all we have to do is get ready for the Redskins this Sunday."

Doctor says injury risk will be very high

By Knight-Ridder Newspapers

SAN JOSE, Calif. — The "deconditioned" National Football League players will run an unusually high risk of injury in Sunday's games, according to a doctor who practices sports medicine.

"Essentially, this is a more dangerous situation," said Jeff Sall, who is a physician for the University of Santa Clara football team. "Players would be going into a regular-season game and could be less conditioned than they were when they went into their first exhibition game after a rigorous training camp.

"It's a situation that's going to be difficult on the players, and they're going to have to be careful."

Sall, who also has treated the players for the U.S. Davis Cup tennis team, emphasized that the degree of risk hinges in large part on how well individuals have kept in shape. He noted that many players may be in condition to compete at full speed.

But he also said there will be an added element of jeopardy resulting from breakdowns in teamwork, such as missed blocking assignments.

Lindsy McLean, the San Francisco 49ers head trainer, agreed with most of Sall's points. "You're going to have a lot of blocks missed completely," said McLean, adding that players' "skill levels" would be reduced.

McLean said the 49er coaches planned to "take it easy" on players in practice sessions and perhaps use mostly "walk-through" drills.

"We don't want to get them sore and tight before the game," said McLean. "People won't be used to working out at full speed, and we're going to be prone to having more injuries."

McLean said the prolonged layoff might not have been without at least one benefit: Most of the players hurt in the two pre-strike games probably have recovered.

Bruins

for the clinching points against the Bruins.

Pankratz says the last game has no bearing on this one except "it's always tougher the second time."

From a mental standpoint, considering the long Bruin losing streak and the Borah comeback last time, Pankratz said "I'm no psychic. I only know that you have to approach every game with the attitude you're playing a good football team and Twin Falls is one of the best or it wouldn't be where it is. We have to play well or we're going to get beat. That's the way I interpret this game."

Pankratz said his team's win over Twin Falls was made more impressive to him when he scouted the Bruins against Mountain Home.

"I'm impressed with Twin Falls' quickness. It's perhaps the quickest Twin Falls team I've seen without the real burner. Defensively they're quick and they've got some fine offensive lineman. Lanning Morrison (offensive tackle) looks to me like an all-star football player and a couple others on that offensive line might be college prospects," Pankratz said.

"We were impressed with the way Twin Falls dominated Mountain Home. The score doesn't begin to even indicate the way the game went. I thought Twin Falls did a great job. I didn't think they could run that well against Mountain Home because they (the Tigers) are quite physical. But those (Twin Falls) backs and that offensive line kept up seven, eight, nine yards a play. It was impressive to us — and scary.

"I think Twin Falls is playing better now than it did when we played the first time," he added.

Pankratz, whose team is trying to get back to .500 after an 0-5 start, said the Lions' successes have been commensurate with the reduction in mistakes.

"We are a very young team and the turnover is the problem we've had all year. Then we've had a perpetual list of injuries. We've lost five players for the season since the opener including our quarterback. But right now we aren't making nearly the mistakes we were. And, like we found out against Twin Falls in that first game, we can't make mistakes and turnovers. They capitalize on them. We just can't make mistakes against them."

In shape?

By BRIAN HEWITT
Chicago Sun-Times

CHICAGO — "The strike is over and coaches around the NFL are brandishing the whips they will have to crack in a hurry to get the players back into condition.

"There are certain players you never worry about what kind of shape they are in," said Bear coach Mike Ditka. "There are others that you know are going to have problems."

All coaches are concerned about how long it will take their players to get into "hitting" shape. Meanwhile, a survey reveals that several coaches should be concerned about whether their players will be able to do one pushup at their first practice.

ATLANTA — Falcons had informal workouts for skill position players only. Twenty showed up the first week, but that number deteriorated rapidly. One day four players appeared and three were quarterbacks. Many linemen lifted weights on their own. "This team will not be in shape," said one observer.

BALTIMORE — The Colts are a young team and most players left town soon after the strike began. Those that remained played basketball three times a week. Up to 20 players attended these games.

BUFFALO — Bills had excellent attendance at informal workouts for first two weeks. After that they abandoned them altogether.

CHICAGO — Bears worked out for an hour three days a week at Deerfield High School. Attendance fluctuated from 20-35 players. Group workouts began to disintegrate in November.

CINCINNATI — Bengals started out as strong as any team with as many as 45 players showing up for the first two weeks. Then the numbers dwindled into the teens and the team workouts were suspended. Twelve to 15 players continued to show up and work together.

CLEVELAND — The Browns have worked out as a group only once a week. But one source says most of them have stayed in excellent shape.

DALLAS — Thirtyniner Cowboys turned out at the Cotton Bowl for the team's first post-strike practice. But in the latter stages of the walkout, between eight and 12 players were appearing. Several Cowboys worked out at Dr. Kenneth Cooper's nearby aerobic fitness center. But, says a Cowboy insider, "these guys are in pretty sad shape."

DENVER — The Broncos were practicing every day up through the middle of October until the organized workouts disintegrated. The Broncos are not expected to be in good physical shape.

DETROIT — Originally the Lions were working out together at least four times a week at Oakland (Mich.) University. Then they cut back to twice a week when their numbers dropped to the mid teens. Many Lions have played basketball and the consensus among the players is the team is in good shape.

GREEN BAY — Maybe because there's not much else to do in Green Bay and because more than 30 players stayed in town, the Packers' workouts at St. Norbert's College have been spirited and well-attended. That spirit was dampened when linebacker George Cumby injured his knee at a practice and had to undergo arthroscopic surgery.

HOUSTON — The Oilers were averaging 25 players a workout, five days a week until late October.

KANSAS CITY — The Chiefs relived the Hank Stram era when they conducted workouts at Swope Park, which Stram had constructed with eight 8-foot high concrete walls to prevent spying on practices. But the group workouts tapered off to the point where only one player showed up for a Friday practice. Several Chiefs played basketball, others lifted weights.

LOS ANGELES RAIDERS — Because most of the Raiders still live in the San Francisco Bay area, it is believed the team had no team workouts.

LOS ANGELES RAMS -- Mostly it was just quarterbacks and receivers working out at Brookhurst Park, several blocks from Rams Park, the team's normal practice facility.

MIAMI — The Dolphins and the Chargers were the most conscientious teams in the league. One source attributed this to the work ethic instilled by Coach Don Shula. More than 30 players showed up regularly for workouts four days a week at Miami Dade North Community College. Player-rep Jimmy Cefalo switched the practices to Miami Dade when several players couldn't find the original site at Florida International University.

MINNESOTA — "A handful of guys got together maybe a couple of days a week," was the description of the Vikings regimen. There were never more than 20 at a workout.

NEW ENGLAND -- For three weeks the Patriots had between 20 and 25 players working out three days a week. Then they adjourned to a health spa for individual conditioning. "For the most part they've been loafing," said one observer in early November.

NEW ORLEANS — The most the Saints ever had for a team workout was 23 players. Included in that group was Houston quarterback Archie Manning, who still lives in New Orleans. Regular Saints quarterback Ken Stabler was nowhere to be seen.

NEW YORK GIANTS — Basketball and softball highlighted several of the team's so-called practices at a New Jersey High School. The workouts lost momentum when only eight players showed up one day.

NEW YORK JETS — Jets practices became disorganized when player-rep Marvin Powell went into the hospital for throat surgery. But they started up again when he got out. After hearing how diligent the Dolphins were, the Jets redoubled their efforts and are expected to be in good condition.

PHILADELPHIA — The Eagles, staunchly pro-union, are believed to be the only team in the league that never scheduled a group workout.

PITTSBURGH — The Steelers entertained onlookers at Pitt Stadium with touch football games three times a week. But like most other teams, player interest waned as October came to an end.

ST. LOUIS — Cardinals practiced together for two weeks before breaking down into smaller groups and less formal workouts. Many players left town.

SAN DIEGO — As late as early November the Chargers were still averaging between 35 and 40 players four days a week. They broke up the tedium with softball and a soccer game in which massive Louis Kelcher enjoyed an unfair advantage playing goalie.

SAN FRANCISCO -- The 49ers are not a strong union team, but an early 0-2 record jolted them into the realization that they must be ready to return. At early workouts as many as 40 players showed up. Most were able to work out on their own rather look for a job because of the $32,000 cushion they earned in last January's Super Bowl.

SEATTLE — Abandoned organized workouts in late October.

TAMPA BAY — Began with one-hour workouts three days a week, but drills became touch football games and attendance dwindled. Only three showed up Monday. Antistrike QB Doug Williams rarely showed up. But consensus is Buccaneers, a team of pure athletes, will be in good shape.

WASHINGTON -- Daily workouts lasted 10 days into the strike before all but skill position players stopped showing up. Coach Joe Gibbs said he was confident his players were remaining fit.

Kim declared dead; organs removed

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — Duk Koo Kim, fatally injured in a title bout last weekend against Ray Mancini, was declared legally dead Wednesday night by a judge who ordered the boxer be kept on life support systems until organs could be removed from his body.

Nevada District Court Judge Paul Goldman declared the 23-year-old South Korean legally dead at 7 p.m. MST.

Kim's mother, who had brought a team of acupuncturists to Las Vegas in a desperate attempt to save her comatose son, covered her eyes with a handkerchief for a few seconds.

"My son has passed away and I made up my mind to transplant his organs to other people," she said through an interpreter. "The American doctors and nurses have done their best to rejuvenate my son. In spite of all our efforts we cannot rejuvenate him. If I continue to let the doctors and staff supply medical treatment it is a burden to them. My son has shown his bravery in fighting Mr. Mancini.

"My true reason for the transplants is that my son can live forever and have everlasting life in this world. Through the transplants his fighting spirit can be given to others."

Doctors said the cause of death was a severe head injury caused by a blood clot from the fight. His brain had shown no life signs since he was knocked out by lightweight champion Mancini in the 14th ground of a title fight Saturday.

Kim was born in a remote village along South Korea's eastern coast 100 miles northeast of Soul. His father died when Kim was 2 and his mother remarried.

Kim quit school when he was 14 and came to Seoul where he roamed the streets. He worked as a shoeshine boy and sold chewing gum and newspapers before working in a factory at 16.

He went to a local gym and learned boxing but had no amateur fights before he met his present manager, Hyun-Chi Kim.

He turned pro at 19 but met with several defeats early in his career.

But he fought his way up the ladder and in February he captured the Orient-Pacific lightweight title from Kwang Min Kim, who had twice failed to win the world lightweight title.

Kim never forgot what he owed to the fight game and once said: "It it had not been thanks to boxing, I would have been a dirty punk."

Although he had little education, he was considered a smart youth who saved his money and once passed the state examination for qualification for high school.

The Mancini-Kim fight was televised to Kim's native land and the loser's gutty performance was widely praised throughout the country.

The decision to call Kim legally dead came after four Korean acupuncturists withdrew from the case after saying that Kim was in a "death situation."

"There is no reaction, no response," said Dr. Chang Fin Lee.

Pittsburgh losses from strike estimated at $4.72 million

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Pittsburgh lost an estimated $4.72 million in tax revenue and consumer spending during the 57-day NFL strike.

According to a joint study by the Chamber of Commerce and the city's Planning Department, about $1.18 million in taxes and spending by fans is generated by each home Pittsburgh Steelers game.

Five home games were called off during the strike, and only one make-up game has been rescheduled, for Jan. 2 against a still unknown opponent.

At least 16 Pittsburghers, all porters and maintenance workers at Three Rivers Stadium, were laid off during the strike. Mike Baldy, operations manager at the stadium, said the furloughed workers would return to work next week.

Murphy gets bargaining chip

Atlanta outfielder wins National League MVP honor

ATLANTA (UPI) — Dale Murphy, the Atlanta Braves' slugging center fielder, got a big negotiating weapon Wednesday in his bid for a long-term contract when he was named the National League's Most Valuable Player.

Murphy, playing under a one-year $400,000 contract, hit .281 with 36 home runs and 109 RBI and won a Gold Glove for his fielding in leading the Braves to the Western Division title. He is eligible for free agency after next season but wants to sign a long-term pact with the Braves.

"The last two years we've tried to negotiate a multi-year deal but we haven't been successful," Murphy said. "I enjoy living in Atlanta and playing for the Braves. I would like to sign a multi-year thing."

The 26-year-old Atlanta outfielder picked up 14 of 24 first-place votes in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America, easily outdistancing St. Louis outfielder Lonnie Smith.

Murphy finished with 283 points while Smith, who had eight first-place votes, had 218 points. Los Angeles outfielder Pedro Guerrero was third with 175 points, followed by Montreal first baseman Al Oliver with 174 and St. Louis reliever Bruce Sutter, 134, who got the other two first-place votes.

"It's a tribute to the team, really," Murphy said about the award. "A lot of guys in the National League had really big years. If the team hadn't done so well, I'm sure I wouldn't have been considered so strongly. I share it with them."

Murphy, who had said earlier he was "embarrassed" by speculation he might win the award, said he wasn't really surprised because "everyone had asked me so much about it."

"I didn't do that much in September and I thought that might hurt my chances," he said, adding he thought Smith, Guerrero, Oliver and Sutter would get strong consideration.

Murphy is the first Atlanta player and third Brave to win the NL MVP in the 51-year history of balloting by the BBWAA, the last being Henry Aaron in 1957.

"I wish he would stop winning these awards until we've signed him to a contract," said Braves' general manager John Mullen. He said negotiations would begin shortly with Murphy's agent, Bruce Church, and "we don't anticipate any problem. I think Dale wants to stay here and we want him to stay here."

"We will work toward a multiple-year contract, probably five years," said Mullen. "He's a fine young man and we hope he finishes his career here."

Mullen noted that Murphy, a devout Mormon who doesn't smoke or drink, went to the Braves' instructional camp two weeks after the season ended and worked on hitting with Atlanta manager Joe Torre.

"That's just the kind of guy he is," said Mullen.

"I considered it a compliment that he (Torre) wanted to go down and spend that much time with me," said Murphy. "I took some batting practice and we did a lot of talking about hitting. I would like to cut down on my strikeouts."

Despite a slump over the final 20 games, Murphy finished second in the NL in homers and tied for the lead in RBI. The 6-foot-5 outfielder also stole 23 bases. He was 3-for-11 as the Braves bowed to St. Louis in the NL playoffs.

Murphy would be eligible to become a free agent after next season but said he has no plans to do so, although he wouldn't "rule it out."

"I think any player that can sign a multi-year contract and the money is fair would be crazy not to sign it," he said.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Two Magic Valley cowboys have qualified for the National Finals Rodeo to be held early next month in Oklahoma City.

Mickey Young of Jerome and Kent Jay Cooper of Declo finished in the top 15 in their events to qualify for the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association final event for 1982.

Young finished sixth in the bareback competition with $39,026 to his credit this year while Cooper took eighth in the saddle bronc with earnings of $29,608.

The top qualifier from Idaho is Dee Pickett. The Caldwell cowboy has qualified for the NFR in three events — all-around, calf roping and team roping. Pickett is tied for third in the latest team roping earnings list, is seventh in all-around earnings with $76,640 and is 10th in calf roping.

Idaho's two other qualifiers are Butch Small of Dubois, third in saddle bronc, and Homedale's Lisa Davis in barrel racing.

The rankings are paced by Chris Lybbert of Coyote, Calif., the first cowboy to earn more than $100,000 in yearly earnings. Lybbert's earnings for the year stand at $101,352, just over $10,000 more than No. 2 Bruce Ford of Kersey, Colo.

New boss brings two coaches from Chicago

A's hire Boros, coaches to complete staff

By JOE GODDARD
Chicago Sun-Times

The Oakland A's, moving swiftly under new Manager Steve Boros, completed their coaching staff Wednesday by hiring Ron Schueler from the White Sox and former Cub batting instructor Billy Williams.

Schueler will coach the pitchers and Williams, the hitters.

Schueler was Sox pitching coach for three seasons until, over objections of the pitchers, he was reassigned at the All-Star break to special assistant to general manager Roland Hemond. "At first, I didn't want to come out here," Schueler said from Oakland, "but they have a good plan and they're enthusiastic. They're going with a youthful staff."

Williams, noting his dismissal by the Cubs was a surprise, said, "I was naturally disappointed when the Cubs let me go, but it's nice to know some people still believe I can teach a kid how to hit. I felt I had the credentials and it was only a matter of time before I got back into baseball."

Neither was too familiar with Boros, first-base coach with the Expos the last two years. Schueler was recommended by new A's aide Bill Rigney and Williams, by special assistant Charlie Metro. Boros approved each after meeting with them Tuesday.

Sox manager Tony LaRussa encouraged Schueler to accept. "No one works harder than Ron. I figured it wouldn't be too long before some club took him," he said. "Working with Tony and Roland," Schueler said, "were the best things to happen to me in baseball."

Williams finished his playing career in Oakland after a brilliant 14-year stay with the Cubs. He hit 392 of his 426 home runs for them.

"I felt the Cubs were going in the right direction and that I had something to do with it," he said of his coaching experience. "I always wanted to win as a player and as a coach. I felt good when the kids hit and bad when they didn't. Now, I've got to get going on learning the A's hitters."

The A's also hired Ed Nottle as bullpen coach and retained from former manager Billy Martin's staff Clete Boyer for third base and Jackie Moore for first. Nottle was a White Sox farm hand in the early 1960s and manager of Triple-A Tacoma last season.

Ex-Filer baseball player does well in Pan Am tryout

FILER — Kent Knigge, a Filer High graduate now pitching for Lewis and Clark College in Lewiston, made an impression during tryouts for the U.S. Pan American Baseball Team last week.

Participating against 225 players and 25 pitchers from the West Coast, including those from the baseball-rich Southern California area, Knigge was one of two pitchers who accomplished his "four-out" stint by facing just four batters.

Knigge, whose pre-college baseball career consisted of Little and Babe Ruth leagues and summer stints with the Buhl Legion team, was informed by U.S. Baseball Federation officials that he had the fastest curve among the West Coast pitching tryouts.

He posted two strikeouts and two ground outs.

The camp, conducted at Cal State-Hayward, was one of 20 scheduled throughout the country this fall. Those selected from the regional camps evidently will be placed on sectional teams and those eight or so teams will play in a "tryout" tournament of some type next summer.

The final 25 will be named to the Pan American team which will participate in the games in Venezuela next August. There also was the probability that the Pan-American team would provide the bulk of the U.S. team which will play in the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics on an exhibition basis.

Knigge is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Knigge, Filer.

Boise St. rips CSI women

BOISE — College of Southern Idaho's women's basketball team paid its first visit to the new Boise State Pavilion Wednesday night — and didn't like it.

The building was fine, it was just that the Bronco women weren't that hospitable. The Broncos, taking advantage of 35 CSI fouls for 33 free points, set a school record in romping off with a 105-43 victory.

There was little CSI Coach Lloyd Hardesty could do but shrug and smile.

"Boise State's got a ball club and are they big?" he said. "I thought we had pretty good size but they had five at a time on the floor over six feet. This is easily the best team I've seen Boise State have.

"I thought we were nervous last night (when CSI bowed to Western Montana), but, oh, man," he said of his largely freshman team.

Boise State put 11 girls in the scoring column and five hit double figures. The Broncos rushed out to a 49-24 halftime score to put the school record within reach. Boise State's previous high was 89 points.

Hardesty said there was nothing wrong with the officiating, which whistled CSI down 35 times, leading to 51 BSU free throw attempts. "They (the Broncos) were so big we were just hacking at them all the time trying to get to the ball. The fouls were there. Our girls tried, you can't take that away from them."

Sophomore Jeanne Morgan paced the Eagles with 13 points, the only CSI player to reach double figures.

Hardesty said there was little thought in his mind about eliminating the BSU series.

"This puts them ahead of us 5-4 in the series and that isn't too bad. But they certainly are getting better."

Looking ahead to the next outing, Hardesty again smiled and said "we're at Utah State Saturday night. It doesn't get any easier. But it's worth it playing teams like Boise State and Utah State because our gals are finding out what college ball is like. I think it better prepares us for when we get to the part of the schedule against other junior colleges in games we have to win to get into regionals."

Clemson to watch bowl bidding

By RICHARD ROSENBLATT
UPI sports writer

NEW YORK — While Clemson will not be going to a bowl this year, a number of other highly-regarded teams seek to clinch or earn bids on this "bowl crazy Saturday."

The 12th-rated Tigers, the defending national champions, have a 7-1-1 record but school president Bill Atchley said the university "for reasons I plan to explain next week, will end its season on Nov. 27."

It has been reported Clemson will be slapped with NCAA probation.

While the Tigers watch helplessly, bowl invitations will be handed out on Saturday and a number of other berths, including spots in the Orange, Cotton and Rose Bowls, will be determined.

Ninth-ranked Oklahoma (8-2) is at No. 4 Nebraska (9-1) to battle for the Big Eight Conference title and an automatic berth in the Orange Bowl. Second-ranked Southern Methodist (10-0) hosts No. 8 Arkansas (8-1) needing a victory to secure the Southwest Conference crown and a berth in the Cotton Bowl.

And, No. 5 Washington can earn a Rose Bowl game against No. 10 Michigan by knocking off Washington State.

While reports have been circulating all week about which team will be going to what bowl, the official matchups will come on Saturday. It has been reported that No. 3 Penn State, 9-1 and preparing for its Nov. 26 game against No. 6 Pittsburgh, is expected to be chosen to play top-ranked and undefeated Georgia in the Sugar Bowl.

That game could decide the national championship should the Nittany Lions beat Pittsburgh and the Bulldogs top Georgia Tech on Nov. 27.

Also, it looks like No. 14 West Virginia, which meets Syracuse, is headed for the Gator Bowl against the loser of the Louisiana State-Florida State game. The winner of that key matchup will likely go to the Orange Bowl.

Some of the nation's top rivalries also are on tap, highlighted by Ohio State-Michigan, UCLA-Southern California, Harvard-Yale and Lafayette-Lehigh.

Vilas downs McEnroe for $100,000

NORFOLK, Va. (UPI) — Guillermo Vilas defeated John McEnroe 6-4, 7-6 Wednesday night in a $100,000 exhibition match.

Vilas doubled-faulted four times and McEnroe once and the match was decided more by errors than by strong play.

Special to The Times-News

We pushed into the shoulder-tall grass, guns ready for the flush of a cock trapped in the tangled vegetation through which we forced our way with difficulty.

A bird flushed. My short double was faster in the tangle — knocking him from the air just as my companions' pumps and automatics were beginning to track.

But the retriever had no idea where to begin looking for the bird in the jungle, and rushed off to find it by sound — a fruitless exercise.

But the tall grass and short visibility did remind one of Jim Corbett's book on tiger hunting. And the number of birds seen coming from the jungle to feed th previous night had been impressive indeed.

My jungle runs for about six miles through land managed by the Bureau of Land Management and three cattle ranchs.

This year, its thornbrakes and thickets provide some the region's best hunting for pheasants despite the lack of grain fields, sugar beets, corn or ditch banks.

Most hunters think of pheasants as ditch-bank birds which rocket out of irrigated fields far out of range by late season.

But during poor pheasant season years such as this one, only the jungles will hold pheasants in large numbers.

That's because the dense cover you curse while trying to make a ringneck fly out of it is really the cradle of next year's birds.

Let's start with the premise that the pheasant isn't really equipped to survive northern winters.

Unlike our native birds, he has no feathers covering his nostrils and his insulation stops halfway down his legs.

Now a pheasant caught in a snowstorm must have good protection. Without it, a storm will fill his nostrils with snow and suffocate him if he faces the blast. But if he turns his back on it, the wind will blow the snow up between the shafts of his feathers and freeze him to death.

A pheasant will survive only by taking shelter in the thickest, nastiest tangle of jungle around.

Those patches exist in most farmlands, but they run pretty small.

A fringe of cattails around a farm pond will shelter some pheasants, but the territorial beasties won't tolerate neighbors unless they give one another some elbow room. So many pheasants are crowded out of the shelter, and die in the storm.

Such jungles are shrinking, and will evenutally disappear unless something is done.

Agricultural economics dictate that a farmer must make as much as possible from a patch of ground if he's to survive the lean years.

As a result, there is a substantial pressure to put cattle into the jungles and let them graze their way through the pheasant habitat.

Where possible, those little ponds on the corners of fields are being drained and turned into cropland.

But you can't blame a farmer, who probably would like to have the pheasants as much as anyone else. He just can't afford the luxury of providing shelter for the birds.

Enter the state with two improtant proposals for the next legislature.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game is eyeing a required pheasant stamp which would be used to create money to pay for jungles and other habitat.

Whether the money would be used both on public land and private land remains at issue, since managers will want to see how much money such a measure generates.

And farmers and ranchers have poor records when it comes to allowing continued growth of jungles.

One Alberta study showed the farmers there were not only unwilling to leave habitat improvement ungrazed, but prefered to do away with pheasants so that they wouldn't have as many hunters.

We'll have to see what kind of reception habitat creation gets in Idaho, but I'm sure it will be better than the Canadian experience.

Most pheasant habitat is now on private land, and it makes sense to conduct habitat enhancement programs on private land.

The obvious alternatives include buying habitat for the state and conducting habitat enhancement programs on land which is now in public ownership.

However, neither measure goes far enough.

I strongly believe that landowners should be paid for maintaining wildlife habitat where more intensive agricultural use would generate farm income.

What habitat now exists is there mostly because a landowner either spends money to maintain it or because he forgoes the income he'd receive if he developed it more more intensive use.

If we're going to turn around our slow decline of game population, we're going to have to learn to work with landowners and make it less painful for them to accomodate wildlife.

Are ski reports accurate?

Most editors say yes, but some raise doubts

By K.C. MASON
United Press International

DENVER — Ski reports, whether compiled by a central clearing house such as Colorado Ski Country USA or by the news media, have some skiers concerned about their reliability.

The question also arises at newspapers which carry the reports but most editors interviewed felt the reports are generally reliable.

Concern about the reports deepens at the beginning and end of the ski season or in sparse snow years such as the one that hit Colorado two years ago, when conditions varied widely from area to area and from day to day.

"People have questions because of the bad year two years ago," said Ski Country spokeswoman Peggy Lamm, whose agency receives morning measurements from each of 32 ski areas in Colorado and compiles them for wire services to distribute to newspapers and broadcasters.

"If we didn't think they were credible, we wouldn't do them," said Ms. Lamm. "To the best our our knowledge, they are accurate and reliable. The only thing we have is our credibility."

Lamm, and Janie McCullough, who supervised the compiling of ski reports the past two seasons, denied there is any cheating on the measurements taken by the ski areas. They said the areas willingly submitted to spot checks and no dishonesty was uncovered.

"Every time we go up to check the stakes, the measurements have been exactly what the ski areas said they were," said Ms. McCullough. "The areas are really willing to let us do it. It's their credibility that is at stake, too."

Dave Smith, sports editor of the Dallas Morning News, said he was concerned the ski reports printed in his newspaper were "days old."

"I'm not convinced that what the wire services are moving are 9 a.m. measurements," said Smith. "I have concerns about how accurate some things that the wire services accept are."

Smith conceded he had more problems when he worked for a New England paper and the ski reports were phoned into the paper by the individual areas. But he said he had talked with skiers who checked the report, went skiing and found conditions and reports didn't match.

Leonard Ziehm, ski editor for the Chicago Sun Times, said his greatest concern was from the Midwest areas which call in individual reports to the newspaper. He said a central collection point probably had more reliability.

"The Colorado report is kind of hard for us to check on, but last year we had no questions," said Ziehm. "It was the year before, when snow was so sparse, that we had some doubts about what was going on out there."

Doug Endly, news editor of the Alamosa Valley Courier in southern Colorado, said the only negative feedback received to the ski reports is when the newspaper doesn't print them because of space limitations.

"A lot of our readers rely on them and they know it when it's not there," said Endly. "But as near as we can determine, they are reliable as much as they can be."

Carlos Salazar, who writes a ski column for the Albuquerque Tribune, said he was skeptical about some reports. He said, however, the state travel division, which compiles the report for New Mexico ski areas, is improving its performance.

"They are getting more up to date information, and if the ski area doesn't report, the statewide report says so," said Salazar. "I think sometimes Ski Country picks up what the ski area had yesterday because they didn't hear from them today."

Ms. McCullough insists the reports are up to date. She said some questions about the report may stem from misunderstanding about where the measurements are taken and what they mean.

Deer Valley — Mercedes of ski resorts

PARK CITY, Utah (UPI) — If the Deer Valley ski resort were a car, it would be a beige Mercedes.

Deer Valley is posh all around.

"Our advertising is aimed at people who make $50,000 or more," says sales representative Vicki Wolff. "If you don't earn at least that much, you probably can't afford to come here for a vacation."

Ms. Wolff hastens to add that Deer Valley is happy to serve day skiers from Utah, and doesn't want to get stuck with the image of "an elitist resort."

But she goes on to say that in a few years, Deer Valley will have an exclusive housing complex with gates open only to vehicles of condominium owners or paying guests.

Silver Lake Center, as the community is called, will feature a lodge run by skiing legend Stein Erickson, 1952 Winter Olympics gold medalist, one of the originators of acrobatic skiing and fomerly the director of skiing at nearby Park City Ski Resort.

Silver Lake Center is home to a restaurant complex featuring gourmet food, but by reservation only. Of course, there is also a cafeteria where you can simply queue up for more humble but still impeccably prepared fare.

A basic Deer Valley condo might sell for $250,000. More likely, you'd shell out $750,000 for mainstream living quarters. Trailside homes on a Deer Valley run sell for more than $1 million.

Deer Valley's motto seems to be, "Never let a machine do that which could be done by a human." Inside check rooms and enclosed areas outside, staffed by Deer Valley employees, take the place of the coin-operated lockers and ski racks favored by other resorts.

The chairs on the lifts are wide, soft and slower than at most resorts and designed for ease in loading and unloading.

In short, a middle-aged executive longer on money than skiing ability will feel at home on Deer Valley slopes.

In order to limit the number of skiers to 2,300 daily (it will rise eventually to 3,000), Deer Valley accepts reservations for lift tickets and stops selling passes when it reaches the limit.

But $22 day passes are in line with those at other resorts.

F&G proposals affect region

Special to The Times-News

JEROME — Twelve bills are being sponsored by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game for consideration durng the forthcoming legislative session.

Five of the bills are of special interest to Region 4 residents. They include a provision for cooperative agreements to help enforce road closures in key wildlife areas and a new definition of public highways which would discourage road hunting. Also included are amending the hunter education law to require everyone born after Jan. 1, 1968, to pass a hunter education test before purchasing a license and a measure to add salmon and steelhead to the mandatory civil penalty law which would provide for a minimum penalty of $100 for illegal take of these two species.

The requirement of transferrng funds for winter feeding created a problem last winter because the law states the funds are to be used as budgeted and cannot be transferred from one allocation to another without special approval. The proposed legislation would allow this transfer for special winter feeding as needed in an emergency.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game has been cooperating with the U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management on road closures to protect big game calving and fawning areas. There are also problems on key winter ranges or excessive access in what were natural refuge areas during the hunting season. The proposed law would allow cooperative agreements with other entities to enable our officers to enforce their closures.

Road hunting is a serious enforcement problem in Region 4 and creates an extremely poor image of the hunter. The law defines a "public highway" as the traveled portion and shoulders of the road. This allows hunters to jump into the borrow pits and legally shoot into private lands without asking permission.

The Region 4 office has received calls from irate landowners this year, complaining about this practice. The proposed legislation would expand the definition of a "public highway" to include the bottom and both slopes of the borrow pit. In the event the right-of-way is fenced, it shall include all land up to the fences. The law would discourage the discharging of firearms from the road right-of-way and help alleviate the present conflict between landowners and hunters.

Idaho's hunter education law sates all 12, 13 or 14 year olds must pass a hunter education course before purchasing a hunting license. The volunteer hunter education instructors from Region 4 do not feel this includes a sufficient age group to provide the necessary training to become a safe and responsible hunter.

The proposed law would expand the requirement for a hunter education course to anyone born after Jan. 1, 1968. It would provide a hunter education course for increasing numbers of hunters as the time from 1968 increased.

Steelhead and salmon are an important economic and recreational resource and the state should be adequately compensated for illegal losses of these species. The new law would add these to the civil penalties list with a $100 mandatory penalty for each illegal fish taken.

Stu Murrell is the regional conservation educator.

Northwest Power Council plan will enhance native fish runs

Boost in spring water flow will reduce energy supply

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Native fish runs in the Northwest — long depleted by hydroelectric dams — will be enhanced by a $160 million annual plan adopted Monday as the first step in forming a long-term regional energy plan.

The Northwest Power Planning Council's fish plan calls for increasing the amount of spring water flow available for salmon and steelhead runs — reducing the basic energy supply to the region by about 550 megawatts a year.

The cost for an average ratepayer would be about $2.16 per month, said council spokesman John Wilson.

The fish plan is part of a two-fold charge the council was given when created by the Northwest Power Act of 1980. The other is to create a long-range energy plan for the region.

"This represents the first step assigned to us by the act," Chairman Dan Evans said after the four-state panel unanimously approved the plan.

Evans said he did not think the plan, effective immediately, would be "held hostage" in negotiations between utilities and the Bonneville Power Administration to set federal wholesale power rates in the region.

Although the plan does not set a fish-production goal, it recognizes pre-1953 runs as an estimate of the fish losses caused by hydroelectric dams, irrigation, ocean fishing and other power-related factors.

Wilson said a lack of specific information on past fish runs made it impossible for the council at this time to set a specific production goal.

"Nobody's got good numbers on what it should be yet," he said.

The fish plan calls for speeding up downstream travel time by smolts — a key in the survival of the young salmon — by increasing flows in the Columbia and Snake rivers from April 15 to June 15, and for easing restrictions on upstream migration.

To correct problems facing returning salmon and steelhead, the council will ask the Corps of Engineer and the mid-Columbia public utility districts to develop riverflow criteria to enhance upstream passage.

The plan also calls for studies of the feasibility of storing water in the heavily agricultural Yakima River Basin, which has lost much of its river flows due to farming expansion over the last 20 years.

The council did not set a firm management plan for ocean fisheries, although it called for "much closer coordination and cooperation with reasonable federal and state fishery agencies that deal with ocean harvest regulations."

As an added measure, the council said it would not approve new hatchery funding until there was better coordination of ocean harvest practices.

The council established a fish and wildlife committee of four council members, one each from Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington, to oversee the mitigation plan.

It also wants all new hydroelectric projects to meet model conditions set in the plan to aid fish migration.

Woodcock hunters few, but it's fun

By SAM COOK
Knight-Ridder Newspapers

"Bird! Bird! Bird!" hollered Joe DeLola.

I swung to my right, waiting for the bird to appear. There it was. Coming right at me, all wings and beak.

I raised my 16-gauge, hoping for a high shot. But the bird stayed low until it was nearly on me. A shot would have endangered DeLola.

Then the bird was rising, going right over me. I raised my gun like a tank turret, but realized when it reached the one o'clock position I was in trouble.

By then the bird was by me. I tried to swing on it without moving my feet. My legs coiled around each other. I rocked and wobbled. I fired twice. The bird kept going.

Welcome to woodcock hunting.

DeLola, an ardent pursuer of the unheralded species, came out of the alder laughing. He's seen woodcock tie lots of hunters in knots.

Maybe unheralded is too charitable a word to describe the woodcock. Forgotten might be better. A few hunters go out looking for these wacky looking little migrants. But not many.

"I guess I'd rate it pretty low by the general, run-of-the-mill northern Minnesota hunter," said Jay Janecek, the Department of Natural Resources regional wildlife manager at Grand Rapids, Minn. "I think there are birds taken, but the majority of them are incidental to grouse taken by hunters."

Too bad. These twittery little things are fun to hunt. As DeLola will tell you, they fly slowly. Slower than any other upland game bird. Just a few knots behind the ruffed grouse.

It's the way they fly that drives a hunter nuts. They take off like some wind-up toy that's been wound too tight. They cork-screw around for awhile, usually on their way to tree-top level. Then they straighten out and reach cruising speed.

The trick is to wait until they quit dipsy-doodling before you shoot. The birds are small, and a light load of 7½ or 8 shot will bring them down easily if it's put in the right spot. So you can afford to let them get out some distance.

But, as in grouse hunting, the farther away the birds get, the more likely you are to have a dozen aspen and-a-handful-of-hazel-trees-in-the way.

It isn't easy.

That ain't all.

These little critters aren't exactly the kind of quarry you can feed a fraternity with. DeLola weighs most of his birds. A big one is 210 grams, or about a half-pound. By the time you remove the feathers and a couple of toothpick legs, you're left with a breast that's almost bite-size.

You don't find meat hunters chasing woodcock.

The woodcock you chase today might not have been here yesterday. Though some spend spring and summer in this area and bring off their broods, most of the hunting is for migrating birds. They spend the summers in Canada, then head for Louisiana and other gulf states to spend the winter.

The big flight could come through any time. Dedicated woodcock hunters like DeLola don't miss many days. All those tough days hunting a few local birds are worth it for a day or two of outstanding hunting when the flight comes through. That's usually in early October.

DeLola and I had left our respective offices at about 2:30 one day this past week just to see if any birds had moved into the area. We worked the alder patch where I performed the 16-gauge pirouette. Then, birdless, we drove to a another favorite patch of DeLola's.

This was another good place to find woodcock. About a 4-year-old clear-cut, coming back with aspen about 10 to 15 feet high. The understory was relatively open, just right for woodcock to probe for worms in the soft soil with their long bills. And easier shooting than in alders.

We hadn't gone a hundred yards when DeLola stooped over and pushed his finger into a splash of white the consistency of putty. A woodcock dropping.

"OK, we have sign here," he said.

Lucky, DeLola's 8-month-old Lab, was working the area like a vacuum cleaner.

killing. It is simply the executing. Being outdoors, encountering a different set of shooting circumstances with every step, every flush. And knowing you can make the shot. Knowing that the gun will find your shoulder and your cheek will find the stock and your eyes will find the bird. All in one unconcious act.

But it isn't enough to just know that. You have to make the shot, see the bird fall and watch the dog pick it up. You take the bird, damp from the dog's mouth, still warm and soft, and look at it before you slip it in your vest.

Maybe you stroke the breast feathers or straighten a wing. One of the beauties of hunting is to see and hold in your hand a wild creature. Ask any hunter. This is as much a part of the hunt as the walking, the flushing and the shooting.

The bird was out in front of me before I knew it. Moving straight away. The load of 8-shot zipped through a golden aspen bough and caught up with the woodcock in a split-second. Lucky delivered the bird to DeLola.

It is always amazing how much confidence a hunter gains making a decent shot on a bird. Now he is on. Ready for anything the next bird might do.

Another good shot brings on a high, heady feeling. Runners would under-stand it. Or whitewater canoeists. It's the same feeling that comes about five miles into an eight-mile run. Or the sensual rush that comes the moment you drop into a bouncy rip on a river.

Don't misunderstand. It isn't the

It is that kind of day for the two of us, this cloudy Tuesday. We don't get near our two-man limit of 10 birds. But we experience the essence of a successful hunt. We'll remember the shots we made.

A year or five or 10 from now, we won't remember how many birds we took home. But we'll remember the lump-in-the-throat feeling that came when the birds were there, the dog worked just right and we did, too.

Turkey shoot Sunday

JEROME — The Snake River Handgun Silhouette Shooters will hold a turket shoot Sunday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. at their range three miles east and five miles north of Jerome.

Perons can enter either a big bore or .22 caliber competition.

Shooters in the big bore event must be a member of the International Handgun Metallic Silhouette Association to win a turkey. Entrants will shoot 40 rounds; 10 rounds each at chickens at 50 meters, pigs at 100 meters, turkeys at 150 meters and rams at 200 meters.

On the .22 range, shooters do not have to be a member of IHMSA. The guns can be any safe long rifle or handgun, but magnums will not be allowed. Two turkeys will be awarded to .22 shooters, one for standing and one for any other position a shooter choses. Forty rounds will be shot; 10 rounds each at chickens at 25 yards, pigs at 50 yards, turkeys at 75 yards and rams at 100 yards.

The big bore fee is $1 for the range fee and $5 for a club member and $7 for a non-member. The .22 fee is $1 for a range fee and $3 for both members and non-members.

The range is located just off U.S. Highway 93 at El Rancho 93.

Beautiful Box Canyon hard to access

Special to The Times-News

The recent chill brings reminders of past winters, and outdoor experiences to come.

It's been seven years since a formerly annual pilgrimage to Box Canyon was held by a partner and me.

Last week I again trekked into this still beautiful and now developed canyon.

Even 20 years ago you did not go into Box Canyon expecting to come out with a couple of six-pounders. A 12-incher was an exceptional catch.

Over the years I have taken this hike for the renewal of values I need once in a while.

Some of the canyon as you walk up stream is exactly as was thousands of years ago, but man has and is still making his scars.

The problems this canyon has caused in charges and counter charges over the years has left a film of misunderstanding about the beautiful place.

In years past, former Senator Frank Church was going to introduce legislation making the area a national area of protection. The legislation probably never got off the ground.

But I will give you some indication that Box Canyon is an exceptional area, and we are fortunate to have the area to hike into.

I have contacted the BLM in past years on this canyon and have been informed: "The only public access to any part of Box Canyon has always been from the Snake River to land administered by the BLM. Since the upper canyon is privately owned, only the lower canyon can be considered available to the public, although the landowner has not tried to keep people out of the canyon from the bottom or hiking in from the top.

"We feel the issue of public acces to Box Canyon is very important since the general public has never understood how limited the BLM's capability really is in trying to perserve Box Canyon."

My trek into this canyon begins by a drive along the Bob Barton Highway, that can be found by taking the off-ramp at Jerome on I-15 going west from Twin Falls.

Cross back over the highway and take a country road named Bob Barton. Go west on this road until it ends at the Snake River Canyon. At this point the road is the access road to the region's boy scout camp.

Park in the area on the rim of the canyon and hike down river, working your way into the canyon. The boy scouts have some good trails in the area and usually it involves finding one that heads west and follows it to the area of Blind and Box canyons.

Since in the beginning of the column I noted that it had been more than seven years since I made the hike into Box Canyon, I now must confess after spending several hours last Saturday trying to hike into Box Canyon from Camp Roach, I found "You just can't get there from here."

The trails heading downstream are still there, but a log bridge crossing Blind Canyon is long gone, and if you plan on making this hike be prepared to wade the stream.

I suggest that any future trips to Box Canyon be done by the way of boating to the merger of Box Canyon and the Snake River and make this your starting point for your hike.

Since this column deals in fishing, my advice on how to fish the area . . . for larger fish, try at the area where the water from Blind Canyon meets at the waters of the Snake River. Cast your lure, fly or bait into the rushing waters of Blind Canyon and then let your bait drift naturally into the mixing currents of the two streams.

If you take the hike up the canyon, you will notice several fish in the crystal clear waters, but most will be spooky.

I like to hike up to the waterfall and fish just below it using small fly patterns.

Best of all, why not leave the fishing gear home this time and have a hike that will be the envy of any hiker in this country, and see floura and fauna that are probably only in this one area.

Please, leave the area as you found it. I, for one, will be Swenning you.

Swen is an avid Twin Falls fisherman.

Snow

"The snow depth isn't measured at the top of a groomed slope," she said. "The stakes are in protected areas where there isn't a lot of wind and the snow isn't skied off."

She also said the stakes are placed in the middle of the mountain (the standard adopted by the U.S. Ski Areas Association) because it shows the average.

"There may be a lot more snow at the top and not as much on the bottom," said Ms. McCullough. "We insist on mid-mountain readings. You can't expect the top base all over the mountain."

"Conditions really vary at the beginning and end of the year, but in mid-season, it doesn't matter except for the powder hounds looking for new snow depths," Ms. Lamm said.

Fish hatchery falls behind work schedule

By STEVE LIPSON
Times-News writer

HAGERMAN — The $5.8 million expansion of the National Fish Hatchery near Hagerman is behind schedule.

But the Army Corps of Engineers, which is supervising the expansion, and the construction company doing the work still expect the project to be finished on time.

"Basically, the project is going pretty good. I don't see any problem getting the project done on time," says Paul Wolf, the project manager for Coast Marine Construction Inc. of Portland.

More than 30 people are working on the construction project, the highest number since work began last summer.

"We've added a few more people this week," Wolf says.

"It looks like a bunch of ants running around with all the people that they have out there," says Dave Bruhn, the hatchery manager.

Excavation is nearly complete and concrete is being poured to form the rectangular ponds, called raceways, that are used for raising fish, Wolf says. Construction of the raceways will allow more steelhead to be raised for release into Idaho rivers.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service operates the hatchery. The expanded fish production is designed to replenish the fish supply in Idaho rivers, which has been cut by construction of dams on the lower Snake River.

The two-year expansion project is designed to allow fish-rearing to continue at the Hagerman facility.

"We're staying in full, regular production mode," Bruhn says. "That's one reason the period of the expansion is so drawn out."

All construction is scheduled for completion by July 1984, according to a Corps of Engineers spokesman.

"The biggest job there is 66 steelhead raceways, scheduled for completion in July of 1983," he said.

A new hatchery building should be completed in May.

"The schedule was planned so we would have additional fish-rearing capacity available next spring," Bruhn says.

Filer school board may OK one-day, voluntary sex-education class

By KAREN MAIN
Times-News correspondent

FILER — If a group of parents and school board members liked what they saw and heard in a sex-education class held at Buhl Junior High School on Wednesday, the Filer School District will start a sex-education program of its own.

Approximately 25 persons showed up at a meeting of the Filer school board Monday night to question the necessity of offering students sex education.

The majority of the persons were concerned about birth-control methods and abortion being discussed in a sex-education class.

Rather than make an immediate decision, school board members agreed that if the parents attended the sex-education class held in Buhl and approved of it, Filer would implement the same program.

The grade level that would receive the information has not been determined yet by the school board, although the Buhl program is presented to eighth-graders.

Filer has not had any courses dealing with sex education since all references to reproduction were removed from textbooks three years ago at the request of a parents group, according to Al Oehsner, the chairman of the school board.

Marvin Bartosovsky, a Buhl junior-high health and science teacher who prepares eighth-grade students for the sex education class by teaching them the vocabulary, spoke in favor of the program at Monday night's meeting.

"We want to prevent pregnancies," Bartosovsky said. "Three years ago, it (teenage pregnancies) was really an epidemic in Buhl.

"We have to address it in education because it's not being addressed elsewhere," he said.

"The best prevention is abstinence," Bartosovsky agreed. But "we don't teach or preach or make decisions for anybody. We leave the morality up to the individuals, but we at least want them informed."

If the options include abortion, "do you show what happens to the fetus?" Kelly Flinn of Filer asked.

"We don't go into that much detail about the moral aspects of abortion," Bartosovsky answered.

When asked how many girls in Filer had been pregnant recently, high-school Principal Larry Roberts said, "I'm only aware of three."

The counselor, J. Howard Moon, deals with those problems, so he would be the one to ask, Roberts said.

"Why should the schools get involved anyway, just because parents don't," Bob Fries of Eden asked. "Why does it fall in the lap of the school district to do this?"

"Nationally and statistically the facts have shown that sex education is not in the public interest," he said.

Fries, who has four children attending private school, later said that he and his wife, Colleen, came to the meeting at the request of several people because they teach natural family planning and work with "pro-life" organizations.

By having sex education, peer pressure is placed on students to have sex, Fries said.

"You may not feel that you are, but the fact that you're bringing it up is kind of consent by not objecting."

Sex education also is needed to warn teenagers about the dangers of venereal disease, board member John Draney said.

"So, basically, what you really should be teaching is chastity," Colleen Fries said.

Approximately 20 percent of high-school students are sexually active, Bartosovsky said. "So if they're going to be sexually active, at least they could use some form of birth control."

When one woman said students who are sexually active probably would look into methods of birth control on their own because they realize the consequences, Bartosovsky replied, "They have barnyard language. They really don't know the truth."

A few people also had qualms about having Sharon Fischer, the registered nurse who organizes the program, teach the class.

Another woman said that Fischer had told the girls where to obtain abortions and birth-control devices.

But Robers said that while Fischer may have discussed birth control, she did not make any recommendations on it.

"You know it (the class) is strictly voluntary," Draney said.

By GLEN WARCHOL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Student journalists at Twin Falls High School recently decided to try and bridge a sexual-information gap that they feel is contributing to a rise in teenage pregnancies.

In the Nov. 5 issue of the Bruin News, student writers tackled the problems of teenage sexuality in a four-story package.

The edition also contained an editorial on the pros and cons of sex education and an editorial cartoon lampooning teenage ignorance in matters of sex.

The key articles of the package were:

- "Young Mothers — Teenagers in an Adult World" by Paula Green, which investigated the impact of pregnancy on three Twin Falls High School students.
- "Agency Helps Teens, Offers Services" by Susie Barker, which explained the family-planning services available through the South Central District Health Department.
- "Course Teaches Valuable Information" by Laurie Tomlinson, which dealt with the high school's under-enrolled child-development classes.
- "Breaking Up: Frustration, Rejection, Sorrow," by Ann Boaz, which addressed the emotional trauma of teenage romances.

According to Bruin News staff members, teenage pregnancies are rampant in the high school, reaching a high of more than 40 last spring.

"Looking at the number of pregnancies at the high school, we felt there was a need to inform people," says Barker, who was the lead writer on the sexuality material.

The student writers say that due to apathy and lack of attendance in child-development classes, many teenagers are ignorant or misinformed on vital pregnancy and sex information. They hoped that the Bruin News articles would at least open a few eyes to the problems.

"If no one else is going to deal with it, that's the purpose of a newspaper," Barker says, "to inform people."

While researching the articles, the Bruin News writers say that they found a profound ignorance of sex among their peers.

"I think there's a need for a sex-education class," Barker says. "You hear so many crazy things. People thought that they could get pregnant from necking."

"And they really believe that," Green says.

Beyond informing their readers of where they can get information, the journalists say that they wanted to get the "reality" of being a teenage mother across to their peers.

Green, who interviewed three teenage mothers, says that most students have a working knowledge of sex and pregnancy, but few think it can happen to them.

"Some kids know so little about it, they don't realize how it changes your whole life," she says. "The girls I interviewed were so positive about it, but I'm sure they wished things were back the way they were before they got pregnant."

The reporters admit that they had some fears about dealing with sex and pregnancy in the student newspaper.

"I thought I was going to get expelled," Green says.

For the most part, the staff was careful not to strain the limits on what they felt the administration thinks a student newspaper can report. In one instance, Barker says, she hesitated to use the word "intercourse" in her story.

But after consulting with the paper's adviser, Mary Lu Barry, the word was used.

"Intercourse is a fact of life," Barker says.

As adviser to the newspaper, Barry says that she had some initial reservations about her students taking on a controversial subject like teenage sexuality. Now, she says, she is proud of the way the students reported and wrote the package of articles.

"I felt it was handled professionally. It could have been in poor taste, but it wasn't. And I think it was really needed."

Karen Bertrand, the child-development instructor at the high school whose class was the subject of one of the stories, says that she is pleased with the articles.

"I was really surprised by the lack of negative feedback on it," she says.

Bertrand says that the Bruin News stories were on the right track. High-school students suffer from an ignorance of sexuality and pregnancy prevention, she says.

New directors struggle to set budget for Twin Falls BID

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — A proposed budget and bylaws for the state's first business improvement district were outlined Wednesday by the district's newly appointed board of directors.

Meeting for the second time, the board struggled, unsuccessfully, to put together a 1983 budget, required by Twin Falls City Council, without having specific information on the costs of potential BID projects.

Under a BID, businesses "tax" themselves to provide funds for promotion and improvements within the district.

A proposed budget, put together by a committee chaired by accountant Dave Cooper, projected that about $42,000 in assessments will be needed.

General allocations outlined were: promotional advertising, $3,500; direct-sales advertising, $21,000; landscaping and general downtown maintenance and improvements, $10,500; administrative expenses, $6,000; and a projected surplus of $1,000.

The balance between funds for promotional advertising and for landscaping provoked discussion, among board members over whether the money was concentrated too heavily in areas that primarily would benefit retail businesses.

Opponents of the BID have charged that non-retail businesses, which would not benefit from promotional efforts, would be forced to pay for such plans.

City officials say that some funds may be shifted between budget categories at a later date — even if a budget is approved — if the board desires. But Cooper noted that the board has yet to set priorities or specific goals, key ingredients for preparing a budget.

The board eventually voted against submitting the proposed budget to council. Instead, members approved a motion that adopted the budget as "tentative." The motion also called for the board chairman to appoint two committees — advertising and landscaping — which will submit recommendations to the board by Jan. 15. The board will then devise a budget and submit it to council.

The board also reviewed the BID bylaws, drawn up by a committee chaired by Al Horner of Twin Falls Bank and Trust. The bylaws will be revised, reviewed by the city attorney and submitted for approval at the board's next meeting.

The proposed bylaws affirm the "one-business, one-vote" rule for BID members. The bylaws also stipulate that members who are delinquent by more than 30 days in paying assessment fees may not vote on BID issues or participate in BID activities.

Board members also decided that the election of the BID board of directors should be done by mail to encourage greater participation. Ballots will be opened on the first Tuesday in December, with board officers elected that month. Terms will begin Jan. 1.

The next BID board of directors meeting has been set for next Tuesday, Nov. 23, at 8 a.m. in Twin Falls Bank and Trust building.

Most Jackpot 'cheating' hearings are delayed

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

JACKPOT — A preliminary hearing for a Buhl woman charged with gaming violations will be held today at 9 a.m. in Elko County Justice Court.

The woman, Julie Marie Kirchmar of Buhl, is accused of cheating at blackjack this summer while playing at Cactus Pete's casino in Jackpot. A complaint on the case was filed July 27.

Jay Snyder, the Jackpot justice of the peace, will hear the case in Elko.

Preliminary hearings for five of the Jackpot dealers also accused of gaming violations have not been set yet. The five — Marvin Cox, Gary Saltas and John Healey, all of Jackpot; Deanne Flint of Hollister; and John Savage of Twin Falls — are accused of helping customers win at cards to increase their tips.

A preliminary hearing for a sixth dealer, Dennis Dunlap of Twin Falls, has been set for Jan. 17 in Elko County Justice Court.

The six dealers were arrested last summer after an undercover investigation by the Nevada Gaming Control Board.

Snyder says that Gary Woodbury, the lawyer for four of the defendants, asked for the delay in the preliminary hearings because he was involved in another trial. Snyder did not know when the preliminary hearings for the other dealers will be held, but he speculated that they may be delayed until February.

Last June, a seventh dealer, Jerry Provence of Hollister, was arrested for gaming violations. In October, at a preliminary hearing in justice court, the court ruled that the prosecution did not have enough evidence to bind the case over to district court.

Although Snyder said that the charges against Provence have been dismissed, Len Otterstrom, a state gaming-control enforcement agent, said Tuesday that the charges were not dismissed and "the case is not totally adjudicated as far as we're concerned."

Snyder said that re-filing the same charges would constitute "double jeopardy" and would not be legal.

Twin Falls woman may need to borrow 'the book' on driving

TWIN FALLS — An out-of-control automobile hit the Twin Falls Public Library on Wednesday.

No injuries were reported in the mishap. But the library suffered an estimated $2,000 in damages, and the driver of the vehicle, 38-year-old Jacqueline Stella Spencer, of 339 Quincy St. in Twin Falls, faces an inattentive-driving citation.

Twin Falls police say the incident occurred at about 8:40 a.m., when Spencer turned left onto Second Street East from Fifth Avenue East. Police say that she failed to stop turning and ended up jumping a curb and slamming into the front of the library, breaking a window.

Twin Falls police report two thefts

The burglary, which occurred between 1 and 5:30 p.m. Saturday, was reported earlier this week, police said.

Apparently, someone walked into the unlocked, unoccupied building and removed the equipment, including an amplifier valued at $400. Police had not estimated a value for the other stolen equipment.

In another case, Twin Falls police reported Wednesday that someone stripped a pickup truck of $750 worth of tires and wheels Monday night.

The truck had been parked at Fontier Motor Co., 356 Addison Ave. W. The tires were last seen at 10 p.m. Monday. When the owners returned the next morning, they found the vehicle supported by wooden and cement blocks.

Declo man sues over BLM's land-application decision

BOISE (UPI) — A Declo man whose application for farmland under the federal Desert Land Entry Act was rejected by the Bureau of Land Management filed suit against the agency Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Boise.

R. Jay Kidd is seeking a court order that would reverse the BLM's decision, which has kept him from taking over the 200 acres, located about four miles from his Magic Valley farm.

Court documents filed Tuesday say that Kidd received first priority for the land in a drawing in 1980, but was bumped after his application for the parcel was rejected because it contained only one of two required affidavits testifying to the location of the parcel.

The land, instead, was granted to Henry W. Manning, a Burley attorney.

But Kidd and his lawyer, James Annest of Burley, contend that Kidd's application was in "substantial compliance" with the law. Their court petition says that Kidd inadvertently included two copies of the same affidavit with his application, rather than the two separate affidavits needed.

Annest said the affidavits would have been a "totally unnecessary and a useless gesture" because the land is "well-suited to a successful and economic farming unit," and BLM employees in the Burley District office were fully aware of that fact due to a long history of studying the site.

Story by KAREN MAIN
Photos by STEVEN GREENE of The Times-News

A wooden rocking horse sits in front of the fireplace

A vision of Christmas

BUHL — A journey back to an idealized Christmas of another era, when "visions of sugarplums danced in their heads," awaits visitors to the "Idaho Christmas" display at the HeArt Gallery in Buhl.

In the cozy surroundings of her elegant turn-of-the-century home, gallery owner and artist Cynthia Wearden has showcased the works of several Idaho artists.

Idaho Christmas will be open to the public starting this Friday through the month of December, with new art pieces added daily, Wearden says.

Enhanced by a setting of towering ceilings, mahogany woodwork and classical wallpaper, every room in the gallery is a visual banquet of paintings, pottery, drawings, statues, sculptures, stained glass, etched glass, clothing, toys, quilts, photographs and Christmas adornments of every conceivable color and texture.

In the plush forest-green carpeted living room, multi-colored woolen socks dangle over the fireplace, beneath a ceramic nativity scene arranged on the mantel, while a large wooden rocking horse waits patiently on the hearth for Christmas morning.

The only signs of modern-day Christmas presents are ceramic "Pac-man" banks and cuddly, blue-eyed stuffed "E.T.s" seated among the wooden trains and planes, a doll house and dolls, stocking-stuffer bears, Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus, and marionettes suspended from the window frame who look on in amusement.

Nearby, a display case protects the fragile beauty of iridescent glass, blown by Craig Zwiefel of Sun Valley; bronze statues of little children, created by Tiffany Wilfert; and symbolic pottery from the Sarayacu-Quichua tribe in the jungles of Ecuador.

Treasures from nature have been transformed into jewelry by Dan and Pegan Venzon of Buhl, who use Idaho gems, and Suzanne Lewis who mounts Rocky Mountain wildflowers on deer antlers.

Lewis says her jewelry is made up of "all the things I've gathered through the years, through the seasons."

The sinks and walls of the country kitchen are charmingly cluttered with handmade pottery in shades of blues and browns, dolls produced from clothespins or straw, statues constructed from nuts and bolts and spark plugs, delicate metal flowers, glass butterflies, clocks and antiques.

One bedroom holds the stark realism of black and white photographs next to brightly colored, surrealistic batik on paper, which contrasts with the gossamer lace beside it. Etched and stained glass hanging in the windows reflects on an assortment of art by Marilyn Hansen that ranges from a cement relief to bizarre pheasant- and duck-footed goblets.

In another bedroom, garments handwoven by Stella Katula of Meridian hang next to woolen clothing from Ecuador — fabrics as soft as dandelion fuzz or as coarse as burlap.

Plans readied for new round of health fairs next spring

By STEPHANIE SCHOROW
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — After last April's health fair, the exhausted organizers sat down together, breathed a sigh of relief and said, "It was a lot of work, but let's do it again."

Or so says one of the organizers.

The first step toward "doing it again" was taken Tuesday when organizers and potential organizers met over breakfast to discuss plans for a second series of health fairs in March.

Last spring, three sites — two in Twin Falls and one in Jerome — offered free blood-pressure, vision, hearing and glaucoma screenings, plus other health-education activities. The fairs were sponsored by the College of Southern Idaho and Magic Valley Regional Medical Center in Twin Falls, St. Benedict's Hospital in Jerome and a host of area civic groups, clubs, doctors and health professionals. In the fall, another health fair was held at Gooding County Memorial Hospital.

This year, health fairs, with programs similar to last year, will be repeated in Twin Falls and Jerome. Health fairs also will be held in Burley, Rupert and the Wood River Valley.

The College of Southern Idaho will sponsor one of the fairs on March 25, from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. MVRMC will sponsor a second fair at CSI on March 26 from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.

St. Benedict's Hospital will sponsor a fair on March 19, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Jerome County Fairgrounds.

The dates and sites for the other three fairs have not been set.

While the upcoming fairs will repeat many of the same tests and programs, organizers are hoping to avoid some of the pitfalls encountered this year.

One major problem was the long wait some people experienced to register and receive certain tests. Karine Siplon, the director of CSI's nursing program and an organizer of the fair, says attempts will be made to minimize waiting, or to make waiting more comfortable.

Participants will be able to pre-register the week before the fair and more chairs will be provided for persons waiting in line, Siplon says.

Lines for the most popular screening tests also will be strategically placed near educational booths, "so if you have to stand in line, it's more enjoyable," Siplon said.

She does feel, however, that a minimum of two hours will be required for a participant to complete all the tests offered at the fair.

Sue Summers, MVRMC's community-relations director and another organizer of the fair, says the sponsors are hoping that organizations with educational booths will offer some kind of activity in addition to handing out pamphlets and answering questions.

Meanwhile, fair organizers are lining up groups and organizations wishing to donate time or resources. For more information, call 733-1280 or 344-1982.

Spencer, 31, will be recruiting and coordinating a group of correspondents throughout The Times-News circulation area. He also will supervise regional news coverage among the current reporting staff.

Several correspondents from Magic Valley communities already cover news and write features for the Times-News, and the newspaper recently began concentrating their work in a weekly "Valley Neighbors" page on Thursdays. As this effort is increased, the page will appear more than once a week.

Emphasis will be on events and issues that are newsworthy to the readers within the local communities where they occur, as well as important on a larger scale to the residents around the Magic Valley region.

A native of Grangeville, Spencer graduated from the University of Idaho in 1974, and since then, he has worked as a reporter and editor for newspapers in Idaho and Alaska. Most recently he and his wife, Inga, co-published two weekly newspapers in Valdez and Cordova, Alaska.

Public was unaware

By BONNIE BAIRD JONES
Times-News writer

JEROME — Although many Jerome residents were unaware of it, Mayor Ralph Peters said Tuesday night that the city of Jerome has been "on the brink of disaster" for the past two weeks.

He made the situation public for the first time in conjunction with a report on repairs of the city's 10th Street water-pumping station.

Lanny Sloan, the city's public-works director, told council that repairs have been made to an electrical panel that operates one of the pumps. The pump is working now, and a panel for a second pump at the well is being installed.

Peters said that one of the electrical panels went out of service two weeks ago, and while it was out for repairs, the second one also stopped functioning.

Sloan said the entire eastern portion of the city has had poor water pressure as a result.

"Actually, it affected the entire city. Had there been a fire, or for some other reason the tank had emptied, the entire town would have been without water," Sloan said.

The mayor said that a small 100-horsepower motor from the city's smaller well was pressed into service and used to fill the city tank each night.

At first, the mayor said, the city was told it would cost $12,000 to replace each of the electrical panels. A more reasonable price of $2,200 was quoted later, he said, and the repair proceeded. Both electrical systems were installed in 1957, and switches had become worn and damaged over the years, he said.

Peters said that with one pump now on the line there is adequate water pressure for this time of year — providing there is no extreme demand for water.

Jerome pound slowly takes shape

JEROME — The new municipal dog pound in Jerome is taking shape a little at a time, and it is expected to be finished before severe winter weather arrives.

At the Tuesday night Jerome City Council meeting, approval was given for payments to cover additional labor and the purchase of material.

Lanny Sloan, the city's public-works director, said the concrete flooring has been poured, and he asked for approval to purchase blocks and other materials for the walls, as well as roofing supplies and material.

He said present estimates indicate that the total cost of the shelter, which is being built by city crews, will be $13,475.

• One bid for a new police car was received and taken under advisement. Con Paulos Chevrolet of Jerome bid $7,479, including the trade of a 1978 patrol car.

• Complaints from a Jerome resident, Gareld Dauvin, of 306 W. Fourth St., led to recommendations for an addition to the city's zoning ordinance.

Mayor Ralph Peters asked Don Jacobson, the building inspector, to contact the city attorney and prepare regulations that would control the size of such objects.

• Clerk Marilyn Bragg announced that a special meeting of council will be held at 1:30 p.m. today to discuss a computer operation for city offices.

Christmas

Even the bathroom, with brass fixtures and old-fashioned facilities reminiscent of bygone days, has knicknacks and real tallow soap from Edna's Homemade Soaps of McCall.

The splendor of fine art that brings back the imagery of a traditional Christmas of the past was arranged by Wearden, who opened the art gallery in February.

In fact, the house is a "unique art gallery in itself," she says. "Some people come over just to look at the house. The house is almost a drawing card in itself."

Although an art gallery might fare better financially in a larger town, Wearden says that "people that are into the arts, find the arts."

Wearden, herself, is a multi-talented artist who works in many mediums, using different styles. In addition to her "brown-haired Jean Harlow" in oil, part of her "Indians Have Hearts, Too" series is on display with her other works at the gallery.

"I call Cynthia a woman Picasso," says Suzanne Lewis, an artist who assists Wearden with the gallery. "Cynthia is so phenomenal and she is a natural artist."

Lewis also praises Wearden for opening an art gallery so that local artists will have a place to display their work, which they sell on consignment through the gallery.

"The Magic Valley is just thick with artists," Lewis says. "But most artists can't satisfactorily market their work," so the gallery serves as the "non-creation end," she says. "It's a showcase of the talents of Magic Valley artists."

The gallery is located at 230 11th Ave. N. in Buhl. For the Christmas show, it will be open Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., and until 9 p.m. on Fridays.

The regular hours of the gallery are Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

"They have to depend on their peers, which hasn't proved to be a good source," she says.

Ironically, after worrying for days about the impact of the stories, the writers found that the distribution of the Nov. 5 edition of the Bruin News was anti-climactic.

The articles — complete with the 60-point headline "TEENAGE SEXUALITY" — didn't cause the feared uproar. While student support for the stories was taken for granted, the four writers expected to hear from the administration and from parents.

"We were concerned about the feedback," Barker says. "We thought we'd get either really good or really bad (feedback). We didn't get either.

"In the past, we've gotten reactions because we had an 'Oh-my-god' in a story," she says. "But on this one, we didn't get any. Maybe people are more open-minded than we thought."

"It wasn't a controversial subject," he says. "The story was pretty factual and well-done."

Charlton says that he doesn't think the stories told the students anything they didn't already know. Pregnancies have become an "accepted part of the high-school lifestyle," he says, with little social stigma attached.

The high-school administration works with pregnant girls to help them to continue in school and earn their diploma, Charlton says.

Jane Cliff, 17, who was one of the young mothers interviewed in Green's article, was pleased with the articles. As a Bruin News staffer, Cliff helped convince Barry that the stories should be written.

"I thought it was about time," she says. "I think most kids are aware of it, but are afraid to ask questions."

With or without any positive feedback on the articles, the staff has decided that the student paper should continue to do in-depth reporting on teenage issues.

A more conventional Bruin News edition, they say, now seems boring.

Corrections

GOODING — The dates of two public meetings that will be held in Gooding by Sen. Steve Symms were listed incorrectly in Wednesday's Times-News.

The meetings will be held on Monday, not Thursday.

Symms will speak at a noon luncheon meeting, sponsored by the Gooding County Republican women, at the Lincoln Inn. And from 1:30 to 3 p.m. he will hold a town meeting in the Gooding County Courthouse.

TWIN FALLS — A story in Wednesday's Times-News incorrectly listed a toll-free telephone number for information about applications for air-traffic controller positions.

According to Edward Koester, the county's agriculture extension agent, the luncheon will recognize Farmer of the Year LaVerne Schroeder of Bliss, runner-up Dan McFadden of Hagerman and contestants Don Butler of Bliss, Bill Grout of Wendell and Maurice Capps of Gooding.

The winner was named during a tour of the contestants' farms last year. The luncheon is to give the public a chance to meet the contestants, Koester says.

Farm Bureau will meet

BLISS — The Gooding County Farm Bureau's annual "resolution" dinner meeting will be held today at 7:30 p.m. at the Oxbow Cafe in Bliss.

The dinner will be followed by a discussion of resolutions that board members feel need more input from other members. They will decide how the county's delegates to the state convention will vote on the issues.

All Farm Bureau members are invited to attend.

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls investment firm of Edward G. Smith and Associates is sponsoring a free workshop today to help people reduce their income-tax bill.

For more information or reservations, call 734-4464.

TWIN FALLS — The trees in the downtown mall area of Twin Falls will be decorated for Christmas this Sunday by members of the Bruin Boosters Club and by members of the various athletic teams in the Twin Falls School District.

Those participating in the decoration project will meet at 1 p.m. at the First Interstate Bank, before dispersing to decorate the 101 trees in the mall area.

Mental-health forum set

TWIN FALLS — A public meeting to discuss the mental health needs of the Magic Valley area will be held next Monday, Nov. 22, by the Twin Falls County Mental Health Association.

Sen. Steven Symms and Attorney General-elect Jim Jones are scheduled to speak.

The meeting, which will be held at 7:30 p.m. in Room 117 of the Shields Building at the College of Southern Idaho, will cover a variety of issues. Symms and Jones will discuss the impact of federal and state legislation. Idaho Mental Health Association officials will discuss the residential needs of severely mentally-ill persons. And Region V Mental Health Center staff members will review what services are available in this area.

Archaeology talks offered

SUN VALLEY — Three archaeologists will make presentations later this year at the Sun Valley Center gallery, as part of the Institute of the American West's ongoing forum on contemporary issues.

The presentations are being made in conjunction with the institute's archaeology program.

Lee Sappington, an archaeologist at the University of Idaho, will speak on "Volcanic Activity and Prehistoric Human Behavior" next Tuesday, Nov. 23, at 7:30 p.m.

William Statham, an archaeologist with the Idaho Historical Society, will present a demonstration on the science and art of prehistoric lithic technology — the manufacturing of stone tools — on Dec. 1.

And on Dec. 8, B. Robert Butler, the curator of archaeology at Idaho State University's Museum of Natural History, will deliver a lecture titled "When Did the Shoshone Come to Idaho?"

Thanksgiving hosts sought

TWIN FALLS — The Pilgrims invited some of their Indian neighbors to their Thanksgiving dinner. You can invite someone from Kuwait, Japan, South Africa or other foreign countries to yours.

The College of Southern Idaho has 48 foreign students, representing the Marshall Islands, Mexico, Africa, Canada, Pakistan, Palestine, Peru, Colombia, Saudi Arabia, Japan, Kuwait, Australia, Bermuda, Truk, Saipan, Jordan and Kosrae.

Many of the students do not live with host families and would welcome the opportunity to share U.S. Thanksgiving traditions with local residents.

Any family interested in hosting one or more foreign students should contact the faculty advisers for the International Students Club: Paula Edmonds-Hollifield at 734-6517, or Tony Mannen at 326-5800. Either of the advisers also can be reached through the CSI switchboard at 733-9554.

Home plans holiday meal

WENDELL — The Magic Valley Manor nursing home in Wendell will serve a Thanksgiving Dinner at noon next Thursday, Nov. 25.

The menu will consist of turkey, dressing, gravy, green beans, jello, fruit salad, hot rolls and pumpkin pie.

The public is invited to have lunch with the residents, although reservations must be made by Monday, Nov. 22. For more information, call 536-5571.

FFA team takes honors

WENDELL — The state champion Future Farmers of America meat-judging team from Wendell High School has competed in national competition.

Rescue unit receives gift

TWIN FALLS — The Twin Falls County Search and Rescue Unit will be able to rescue individuals more easily in the future.

Thanks to a gift of $500 from the Twin Falls Travelers Good Sam Club, the unit will be able to pay for a winch that can be used from the rim of a canyon to bring heavy objects up from the floor or walls of a canyon.

The equipment has been needed for some time, according to Jim Wood, the president of the search and rescue unit.

Wood and another search-and-rescue member, John Blake, are in the process of designing the winch, which will be similar to one used by the Navy for rescue operations and heavy lifting.

Wood says the equipment should be available by summer.

Idaho Power offers annual energy contest

TWIN FALLS — Contest rules for the Idaho Power Comany's fourth annual alternate energy contest are being distributed to junior high schools throughout the company's service area.

Trophies and cash awards of up to $100 will be presented to students who develop the most original and practical energy projects, according to Roxie Simcoe, the utility's consumer-education representative for this area.

Winners in each of the company's four regions will receive $100. Second-place finishers will receive $75, and third-place winners $50. Winners' schools will receive equal cash awards, for use in the purchase of instructional materials.

Projects can be working models, illustrations or a combination of the two, according to Simcoe. Topics may relate to the efficient use of conventional energy supplies or the development of energy alternatives, such as solar, geothermal and bio-fuels.

Students will be judged on their ability to explain the projects and on workmanship.

Packets containing forms and a list of available positions can be obtained by writing: National Park Service, Room 1920, Westin Building, 2001 Sixth Ave., Seattle, Wash., 98121.

Seasonal employment with the agency typically runs from Memorial Day to Labor Day. The deadline for applications is Jan. 15.

The same deadline applies for applications for summer employment with the U.S. Forest Service, although that agency's forms cannot be filed until Dec. 1, according to a spokesman for the Sawtooth National Forest in Twin Falls.

Packets of information about Forest Service jobs can be obtained from the Sawtooth Forest office at 1525 E. Addison Ave.

HAGERMAN — A brochure designed to promote tourism in the Hagerman area is now available from the Hagerman Valley Chamber of Commerce.

According to H.L. Holmes, the president of the chamber, the brochures can be obtained at the chamber office in Hagerman, or at chamber offices in any of the other cities featured in the pamphlet — Bliss, Buhl, Gooding, Jerome and Wendell. Copies also can be obtained at the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce office, or by sending 20 cents to the Hagerman chamber officer to cover mailing costs.

A total of 20,000 of the brochures have been produced, using a $5,040 grant from the Idaho Travel Committee.

By TERRELL WILLIAMS
Times-News correspondent

HAGERMAN — Despite a desperate request, Hagerman City Council voted Tuesday not to vacate a city right of way on which a house is built.

Mike Douglas, a Hagerman attorney who represents house owner Jack Allen, explained to council earlier this month that a recent survey shows that Allen's house is 3.2 feet on a street right of way that the city has never used. He asked the city to vacate 10 feet of the land.

The house is now for sale and a buyer has been found, Douglas said, but the city must vacate the right of way in order for Allen to get the title insurance necessary for the sale.

The house could be sold without title insurance, Douglas said, "but there aren't very many buyers who will buy without it."

The attorney suggested a solution — one recommended by the city Planning and Zoning Commission — that the city could vacate the property only for the life of the house.

However, Mayor Karen Yarbrough said that if the street, First Avenue, ever would be put in, it would be a main road through the area. She added that this section of town, west of the grade school, is undergoing development. And the requested action could cause a more narrow or a curved road, she said.

"It seems like (past) vacations have come back to haunt a later council in future years," the mayor said.

In further discussion of the issue, council members said they had been to the site to study the problem. Houses built on city rights of way are a common problem throughout the city, and giving property to one could "open a hornet's nest," they said.

Douglas contended no precedent would be set, and without title insurance, Allen's house, his lifetime investment, could not be sold.

In other business:

• Council voted to buy the fuel needed for city vehicles from the Motor Inn in Hagerman, rather than the Wendell Grange. Starting Dec. 1, the city will pay $1.17.9 per gallon, compared to the $1.20.9 paid now.

• Old library windows will be replaced with air-tight ones, by building inspector Howard Winegar. Although a building permit is technically required, Winegar said he will waiver the fee because the library is a city building.

By KATE LOPEZ
Times-News correspondent

HANSEN — School board officials in Hansen have decided to continue to seek a compromise with the Gordon Paving Co. of Twin Falls over a paving problem at the high school parking lot.

But the board is seeking an agreement that is truly "a compromise, in the spirit of compromise," according to board Chairman Richard Youree.

On Aug. 5, Brad Hansen, of Gordon Paving, presented the board with a bid of $4,181 to pave the parking lot.

At the board's regular meeting on Oct. 18, however, Hansen reappeared to admit that he had made an error in measuring the lot.

The figure he presented to the board was a bid based on a measurement of 173 feet, 8 inches by 50 feet, rather than the true size of 173 feet, 8 inches by 150 feet.

The full job, according to Hansen, should have been bid for approximately $13,200, depending on exactly what the district wanted paved.

At the October meeting, after the paving agreement had been declared legally binding by attorney Dan Slavin, the district's legal counsel, the board decided to attempt a compromise with the company.

"I'm not saying we will definitely take this action, but would you be willing to engineer a compromise to solve the issue?" Youree asked Hansen at the October meeting. Hansen said he would.

According to Superintendent Richard Smith, a compromised bid of $12,471 was presented to Smith shortly after the October meeting.

However, the board was disappointed in the company's spirit of compromise, Smith said at this Monday's board meeting.

Action was taken by the board to have Slavin contact the company in an attempt to work out a "better" compromise.

Gooding City Council mulls uses for land near municipal airport

By JANENE BUCKWAY
Times-News correspondent

GOODING — Uses for city-owned land around the Gooding Municipal Airport still are under consideration.

Gooding City Council agreed Monday to hold a special session next Monday, Nov. 22, to consider a lease application from Magic Valley Raceway Inc., which operated a dragstrip on an abandoned runway last summer.

The firm is asking for a three-year lease and has stressed that time is a big factor.

"We need to know soon if we will get the lease, so we can put together a race schedule," spokesman Frank Priess said at Monday's meeting.

However, Mayor Gene Heller said that the city needs to have its insurance broker and legal counsel review the contract and the raceway's insurance policy before any decisions are made.

Other points to be determined include the annual lease fee. Magic Valley Raceway has offered $800 per year.

Wes Fields, an area rancher, also has made an offer to lease the 120 acres around the abandoned airstrip. Another runway at the airport still is in use.

It was agreed earlier, by all parties, that a dual lease for grazing from autumn to spring and racing during the summer could be worked out.

In other business Monday night, council agreed to raise the user's fee charged on aviation fuel at the Gooding Municipal Airport from 1.5 cents per gallon to 3 cents.

The change will be enacted when a new airport operation lease is granted in January.

Councilman Robert Moline explained that the cost to operate and repair the gas pumps at the airport this year has been $900, while only $500 has been earned from the sale of the fuel.

Bellevue students receive two-unit portable building

HAILEY — Bellevue Elementary students in Blaine County now have a little more room in which to breath.

Superintendent Dick Jones told the Blaine County school board on Tuesday that 50 students have been moved into a two-unit portable classroom building at Bellevue. The unit was leased this fall to relieve some of the district's overcrowding problems.

Jones said that with the portable unit in place, the average classroom size in Bellevue has been reduced to 25 students.

The board also discussed an advanced placement program, Jones said. Using college board scores, high-school counselors will select six students to participate in an accelerated learning program during their free periods.

Later in the year, the students will take an advanced placement test, which will make it possible for them to gain college-level freshman credits.

The program will cost only about $500 to defray the expense of the test, Jones said.

The district's sale of extra violins earlier this month was a partial success, Jones said, but 12 violins and two cellos remain to be sold. Interested parties can still submit bids to the district on the surplus instruments. The bids will be opened next Tuesday, Nov. 23, at 1 p.m.

Expert: farmers should know markets

COEUR D'ALENE (UPI) — Idaho consumers and farmers must be educated about exporting if market conditions are to improve, an agricultural specialist told farmers Wendesday at a meeting of the Idaho Cooperative Council.

Lawerance Gray, a Nampa farmer and chairman of the Agriculture Council of America, said his organization is trying to teach consumers about the need to develop export markets for farm commodities.

"The more exports we have, the stronger economy we'll have," he said. Consumers should support higher exports because they allow farmers to operate at their full potential, which ultimately means lower costs, he said.

People in the United States spend a smaller percentage of income on food each year, Gray said. Projected food costs for this year are at 13.3 percent of the average income, he said.

"Americans spend more on recreation and less on food — than any other nation," he said. "They shouldn't begrudge export markets."

Similarly, farmers and commodity organizations need to realize that the success of their crops is tied into the success of others, Gray said.

Potato farmers, for example, should support efforts by rice producers to improve their markets, he said. If rice farmers do poorly while potato farming is more profitable, rice producers could switch to potatoes and bring down the market price for the spuds, he said.

Gray also cited the example of a Birdseye food processing plant near Nampa that closed several years ago. It processed spinach, lima beans and pearl onions.

But farmers who had been growing those crops switched to peppermint when the plant closed — and that brought mint prices down from $14 to $7 per ton, he said.

The previous peppermint growers should have been interested in helping keep the plant open, he said.

"If it was kept open, we still would have $14 peppermint," he said.

Agricultural embargoes often are farmers worst enemies because they have ruined markets already developed, he said.

For example, before a 1975 embargo, the United States sold Japan most of the soybeans used in that country. Now, although the embargo has been lifted, Brazil sells Japan most of the soybeans used in that far eastern country.

Power subsidies draw some criticism

PORTLAND, Ore. (UPI) — Homebuilders and utilities are less than pleased by the idea of subsidies for new energy-efficient housing, as proposed by the Northwest Power Planning Council.

However, speakers at a council meeting in Portland Tuesday did not write off the idea of establishing more energy-efficient building codes to promote conservation in the Northwest.

Most suggested the council try to set model codes with benefits that would be clear without subsidies, which they argued would create new costs for electricity ratepayers.

Conservation advocates backed the council's plan as a step toward fully implementing conservation as an energy resource in the Northwest. The Pacific Northwest Electric Power Planning and Conservation Act, approved by Congress in 1980, gives conservation top priority as an energy resource.

As part of its model conservation standards, the council is thinking about establishing model energy-efficient building codes, dividing the Northwest into three climate regions with appropriate codes for each area.

To begin the program, the council would call for subsidizing the difference between building new homes to existing code levels and building them to the more stringent codes recommended in the council's plan. The incentive program would last for three to five years.

By the end of the incentive program, the council hopes the four states in the region — Oregon, Idaho, Washington and Montana — would have established state building codes to conform with the council's model standards.

The cost of the program would be assigned to the Bonneville Power Administration, which would raise the revenues through wholesale power rates — and in the long-run, costs would be passed on to electricity ratepayers throughout the Northwest.

The council's staff estimates the program could cost up to $112 million per year, assuming a strong economy in which 60,000 new homes were built to the more stringent code. The program could save 150 to 750 megawatts of electricity, depending on the economy, through the year 2001.

Sue Hickey, director of planning and evaluation in the BPA's conservation office, said studies by her staff show the program could cost 20 to 40 percent more than council estimates — and the savings it might produce could be 20 to 35 percent lower than the council figures.

Ms. Hickey said the BPA's analysis showed the full reimbursement for the program did not seem appropriate, although she said some allocation might be necessary to help pay the cost of code enforcement efforts.

Robber who killed partner gets life sentence

By STEVEN CHRISTENSEN
United Press International

BOISE (UPI) — Michael Wayne Hoffman, a felon who pleaded guilty to killing his alleged robbery partner in a dispute over a drug purchase, was ordered Wednesday to serve a fixed life term in the Idaho State Penitentiary.

Judge Alan M. Schwartzmann handed down the prison term after Ada County Deputy Prosecutor Jay Rosenthal told the court Hoffman, 23, is "a hard man, a callous man and a brutal murderer."

The judge said it was not reasonable to presume the defendant will spend the rest of his life at the prison south of Boise, considering Hoffman's age and overcrowded conditions at the facility. But he urged the Idaho Board of Pardons against considering any commutation of the sentence for at least 20 years.

Hoffman initially pleaded innocent to charges he gunned down Dennis Trent Jacobs, 30, at the victim's Boise home last January. But he changed his plea to guilty of first-degree murder after prosecutors agreed they would not seek the death penalty in the case.

Rosenthal said testimony from witnesses indicated Hoffman bought "bad drugs at a high price" from Jacobs — who allegedly helped him hold up a Pocatello motel a year ago — and was angry about the transaction.

The defendant returned to the home, "walked into the bedroom, held Jacobs and his wife at gunpoint, then shot Jacobs between the eyes," Rosenthal said in urging a fixed life term in the case.

The prosecutor described Hoffman as a "psychopathic" and habitual criminal with a poor prognosis for rehabilitation. He said Hoffman's long history of crime shows the defendant has a "total and absolute disregard for human life."

But defense attorney Laird Stone urged Swartzmann to impose an indeterminate life sentence in the case, making Hoffman eligible for parole in as few as 10 years.

Stone said Jacobs was a hardened drug pusher. Many outstanding members of the Boise community think Hoffman "should get an award for what he did," the lawyer said.

Swartzmann said he was imposing the fixed term to protect society from the defendant, also hoping the sentence might act as a deterrent to others. The judge added he would give "no weight" to the possibility of rehabilitating the convict because of Hoffman's long criminal record.

He ordered the term to run concurrent to a 15-year indeterminate sentence Hoffman is already serving at the state prison for armed robbery.

News briefs

St. Luke's plans expansion

Hospital official Rita Ryan said the improvements would add 22 beds to the 300-bed hospital within four years and would broaden patient health-care services.

Administrators of the downtown Boise hospital have submitted their expansion plans to the Idaho Health Facilities Review Board, a state panel which must give its approval for the project before any work can begin.

Ms. Ryan said Tuesday the expansion projects — scheduled to begin next year — would relieve overcrowding in the main hospital complex and the connected Mountain States Tumor Institute.

Court upholds teacher firing

BOISE (UPI) — The state Court of Appeals has refused to order the Boundary County School District to rehire a teacher for was fired after her first year on the job.

Leslie Knudson, who sought an order overturning a First District Court case she lost, asked the Appeals Court to reinstate her.

The first-year teacher contended in her suit against the northern Idaho school district that she should have been put on probation before trustees decided not to re-employ her for another year.

Appeals Court judges determined, however, that the Idaho Code does not make probation a prerequisite to denying a first-year teacher an employment contract for a second year.

Meridian school bond fails

MERIDIAN (UPI) — Meridian School District patrons have defeated a $9 million bond issue proposal that would have paid for construction of a second high school in the western Ada County community.

The proposal received 65.4 percent approval, but that was a few points short of the two-thirds majority required to pass such measures.

The tally from Tuesday's voting was 4,351 ballots in favor of the bond issue and 2,303 against it.

Supporters of the school-funding proposal agreed with opponents of the plan that officials will attempt within the next few months to hold a second election on the bond issue.

School district administrators said the bond issue is needed so the district can build a second high school to relieve pressure on Meridian High School, which officials say is overcrowded because of rapid population growth in the Boise suburban community.

Idaho Power to build plant

BOISE (UPI) — Idaho Power Co. submitted to the Boise Project Board of Control Wednesday a signed contract for construction of an 87.4-megawatt hydroelectric power plant at Lucky Peak Dam, a utility official said.

The utility would build the plant and pay participants in the irrigators' group $5 million per year once the generator was in operation, said Idaho Power spokesman Jim Taney.

Taney said the control board decided to accept the contract and refer it for additional consideration to the five Treasure Valley irrigation districts of which the board is comprised.

Royse Van Curen, Boise Project manager, and Warren Tolmie, chairman of the control board, were unavailable for comment on the contract proposal Wednesday.

Taney said Idaho Power would like to begin construction in 1984. He said the contract said the utility could have the power plant on line and producing electricity no later than 1992.

The spokesman said the utility was confident the lengthy negotiations over the proposed Lucky Peak project were near an end.

"There have been obstacles all along, but we believe most of those obstacles have been resolved," Taney said.

In September, Idaho Power told officials of the control board — whose members own Boise River water rights — that it might delay by four years plans to build the Lucky Peak plant.

UI to raise funds

MOSCOW (UPI) — The University of Idaho Foundation says it hopes to raise more than $3.9 million for additional funding this year in some programs at the fiscally troubled school.

Wally Pfeiffer, executive director of the foundation, presented to board members at a meeting this week a list of "top-priority" projects which may receive funding from the private, non-profit group.

Pfeiffer said the group has received $900,000 so far during fiscal year 1983, which ends next June 30.

Some of the projects listed for funding consideration include $1.5 million for offices and equipment for the Agricultural Engineering Building, now under construction; $500,000 for scientific equipment for a planned annex to the Life Sciences Building; $200,000 for another video classroom; $75,000 for an expanded microcomputer laboratory; $500,000 for endowments for academic excellence and business enterprise; and $190,000 for fund-raising overhead.

Dear Abby

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Eight years ago, after 13 years of marriage, my husband and I divorced. I have custody of a daughter (16) and a son (14).

My former husband (Bob) married almost immediately and lives out of state. He has continued to love and support our children through the years. They visit him for vacations and are in close touch with him, which I think is wonderful.

Bob announced six months ago that he and his wife are filing for divorce. Last week he called and asked if the children could go on a skiing vacation with him during Christmas vacation. I agreed, thinking it would be good for the children to be alone with their dad once again. Yesterday my daughter informed me that Dad told her he planned to take his new girlfriend along!

Abby, I've taken my children to church and have tried to set a good example for them, and I am very upset about this proposed arrangement. I am also angry that Bob was not completely honest with me.

I know I am still clinging to old-fashioned morals, and I probably would be called "prudish" by some, but this arrangement would contradict the teachings I have tried to instill in our children. (His divorce will not even be final at the time of this trip.)

My friends tell me that times have changed and I should be more "open-minded." What would you do under my circumstances?

— OLD-FASHIONED

DEAR OLD-FASHIONED: I would tell Bob that as long as the children are in my care, I will not consent to their vacationing with him and a woman to whom he is not married. Period.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 22-year-old female who until recently was involved with a 35-year-old man for about a month. We had a good relationship and enjoyed each other's company until he wanted sex. I felt I wasn't ready for that even though I was beginning to fall in love with him.

He felt hurt and thought I didn't care for him, so he stopped calling me. Now he's telling everyone that we broke up because of the age difference. I know that wasn't true, and now I regret that I didn't give in to his demands for sex.

I can't sleep nights wishing I had been Miss Sexy instead of Miss Goody-Goody.

— SORRY IN TRENTON, N.J.

DEAR SORRY: Dry your tears. You obviously didn't know him very well after a one-month involvement. He didn't drop you because he thought you didn't care for him; he dropped you because all he wanted from you was sex. If he really cared for you, he would have waited.

DEAR ABBY: My sister-in-law is pregnant with her second child and I'd like to give her a baby shower. She already has many of the things she needs for the coming baby, so I want to know if it would be proper to list on the invitations the things (brand names and colors) she needs the most, and ask the guests to please specify with their R.S.V.P. which gift they chose?

— PERPLEXED

DEAR PERPLEXED: It's not proper to ask for anything specific with an invitation, but if anyone should inquire, it's proper to offer suggestions.

Wall Street bounces back from drubbings

By FRANK W. SLUSSER
United Press International

NEW YORK — The stock market rebounded from three consecutive drubbings Wednesday with a sharp gain.

The advance was sparked by investor hopes the Federal Reserve will cut its discount rate and President Reagan might step up next year's tax cut.

Oil issues, which were ignored in the first part of Wall Street's historic rally, were pacesetters in the surge that reinforced arguments a major bull market is under way.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which skidded 13.43 points Tuesday and 46.73 the previous three sessions, climbed 19.50 to 1,027.50 with a late surge. It has gained or lost an average of 16.91 points the past eight sessions.

The New York Stock Exchange index rose 1.37 to 79.67 and the price of an average share increased 57 cents. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 2.51 to 137.93. Advances topped declines 1,158-433 among the 1,963 issues traded.

Fed Chairman Paul Volcker raised hopes for a discount rate cut in a speech Tuesday night in which he said the board would continue to fight inflation while attempting to provide enough fuel for economic recovery.

President Reagan fueled the rally when he acknowledged discussing the prospects of stepping up the 10 percent cut slated for July to January in order to stimulate the economy. But no decision has been made.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter totaled 96,457,570 shares compared with 118,851,670 traded Tuesday.

The American Stock Exchange index rose 5.03 to 333.22 and the price of a share added 21 cents. Advances topped declines 429-193 among the 836 issues traded. Composite volume totaled 8,457,240 shares compared with 9,317,200 traded Tuesday.

The National Association of Securities Dealers NASDAQ index of OTC stocks gained 2.78 to 227.75.

On the trading floor, Energy Exchange, a newly formed oil and gas exploration firm, was the most active NYSE-listed issue, off ⅞ to 1⅞ with blocks of 1,050,000 shares at 2½ and 156,000 shares at 2.

Sony Corp. was second on the list, off ⅛ to 16 following blocks of 100,000 shares and 250,000 shares, both at 16¼. The stock has been active amid predictions the company would post higher 1983 earnings.

American Telephone & Telegraph, which announced plans to raise $1 billion in a stock sale, was the third most active, off ¼ to 61⅝.

Texaco rose 1⅛ to 30⅞. The company, which predicted an "improving outlook" in 1983, confirmed it had made a giant oil discovery in the Santa Maria Basin offshore southern California.

Among the other oils, Exxon rose ¾ to 29, Getty 2½ to 51, Phillips Petroleum 1⅛ to 32½, Shell 1⅛ to 34¾ and Superior Oil 1 to 28¾.

H-P reports record sales

PALO ALTO, Calif. (UPI) — Hewlett-Packard Co., a major designer and manufacturer of electronic instruments, had record sales of $4.25 billion during the fiscal year, a 19 percent increase from 1981.

Net earnings for the fiscal year ending Oct. 31 was up 25 percent to $383 million, or $3.05 per share, the company said Wednesday. For the year earlier period the company earned $305 million or $2.49 a share.

For the final quarter earnings came to $111 million or 87 cents a share against $93million or 75 cents a year earlier. Sales were $1.14 billion against $1 billion a year earlier.

Ma Bell plans stock offer

NEW YORK (UPI) — American Telephone & Telegraph Co. announced Wednesday it plans a common stock offering to raise up to $1 billion, which it plans to sell in a single underwritten offering.

AT&T, whose more than 3 million shareholders make it the nation's most widely held stock, said it would file a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission for the offering.

The company did not disclose the number of shares it would sell, or when it would file. Based on a share price of $60, $1 billion would amount to a little over 16½ million shares.

AT&T is under order by the Justice Department to divest its 22 Bell operating companies, but a spokesman said "the offering has nothing to do with the divestiture."

In a separate announcement, AT&T directors Wednesday authorized the company's regular $1.35 a share quarterly dividend, payable Jan. 3 to shareholders of record Nov. 30.

Grain trade decline looms

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The lack of demand for coarse grain and rice imports has prompted a 2-million-ton downward revision in forecast world grain trade for the 1982-1983 crop year compared with last month's estimate, the Agriculture Department reports.

World grain trade for the period now is projected at 210 million metric tons, its lowest level in two years, the Department said.

But prices have strengthened on indications trade will pick up in coming months as major markets such as the Soviet Union, Mexico and Japan move more actively to cover their eventual import needs.

New oil discovery confirmed

HOUSTON (UPI) — Texaco U.S.A. Wednesday said it has confirmed the existence of a giant new oil discovery off Southern California.

Similar announcements have been made in recent days by Standard Oil Co. of California and Phillips Petroleum. A spokesman for the American Petroleum Institute said the discovery could be the biggest for the United States since that of the Prudhoe Bay field on the Arctic Slope of Alaska.

Mutuals set to take on banks over accounts

By JOAN FITZGERALD
Boston Globe

Mutual fund industry spokesmen say they are ready to take on the nation's banks, which got authority this week to offer higher-yielding deposit accounts in competition with the money funds.

"We will give (banks) a good run for their money," said Reg Green, vice president of the Investment Company Institute (ICI), which represents the $230 billion industry. "If they price (the interest paid on customer accounts) at the market rate, we have a lot of strength."

Federal banking officials predict that the new bank account, outlined by the Depository Institutions Deregulatory Committee (DIDC), could draw up to $100 billion in the first six months of its introduction, but those close to the mutual fund industry doubt that.

Green admitted the industry was concerned that banks would engage in what he called "predatory pricing," offering high rates on the accounts and later dropping them to market rates after depositors had established DIDC accounts. Larger banks, he said, might operate such accounts as loss leaders, offering rates which, while they do not allow the bank a profit, do attract new customers into the bank.

Green quietly raised as much doubt about the banking industry as he could gracefully do in the course of a brief telephone interview. He said the mutual fund industry, which had "an unparalleled record of safety and prudence," was concerned about the use of aggressive pricing by weak banks.

"Shaky banks, such as Penn Square (a bank in Oklahoma that recently went bankrupt) might engage in this kind of practice to shore up its shaky position," Green suggested.

John F. O'Brien, executive vice president of Boston's Fidelity Management & Research, said his mutual fund company would be able to differentiate successfully its products from those of the banks by offering higher yields and additional services to its shareholders.

William E. Donoghue, publisher of Money Fund Letter, who has called the new account the "final false start" for depository institutions, does not believe the new instrument will make much of a dent in the money fund business.

He predicted banks would impose hidden charges and balance requirements in other accounts as conditions for having the new account.

He said banks will use his Donoghue's Money Fund Average to calculate the interest rate on the new accounts and he says 70 banks have bought licenses for the index.

Green said intrafund transfers (transfers by shareholders in and out of a family of mutual funds) was at record high levels — a fact he interpreted as evidence of an increasing desire among savers to have flexibility with their invested money.

Yet it is clear the mutual fund industry is not going to stand by passively. In October, while the Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee was mulling over the outline of the new account, the Investment Company Institute filed suit in federal district court.

The ICI charged that the new account would give banks a competitive edge over the mutual funds. The group argued the new account should have a ceiling on interest rates paid on deposits and that the deposits should not be federally insured.

Bankers already are taking advantage of the unregulated interest rate to offer yields that are higher than those available in money market funds. On Nov. 1, Home Federal Savings & Loan Association of San Diego began advertising the new account with a pre-introduction premium of 3 percentage points over the average yield on money market funds to customers signing up before Nov. 6. The bank, which is also limiting the size of the account to a maximum $75,000, said it expected the promotion to attract $50 million in November.

Other defensive tactics mentioned by the mutual fund industry include lowering current check minimums and lowering minimum balances on their own funds. In addition, the industry is looking into the idea of a cooperative insurance program to counter the federal insurance allowed banks, an idea believed to be favored more by the smaller money funds.

GARY LEWELLYN

Embezzling lands Iowan in prison

DES MOINES, Iowa (UPI) — Former stockbroker Gary Lewellyn was sentenced Wednesday to 20 years in prison for embezzling nearly $18 million from two Iowa banks.

Lewellyn, 33, of West Des Moines, was convicted in September. He was sentenced by U.S. District Judge William C. Stuart.

Stuart, who presided over the stockbroker's trial without a jury, found Lewellyn guilty on Sept. 29 of embezzling $16.7 million from the former First National Bank of Humboldt and $1 million from the University Bank and Trust of Ames.

The banks entrusted Lewellyn with the money so he could invest it. Instead, he opened numerous accounts with banks and securities firms under his name and the name of a woman described as his "pampered princess," Katherine Barakat.

Change in price support setup opens federal loans to farmers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Agriculture Department Wednesday announced a major change in its price support program that will allow farmers to take advantage of government loans despite current storage shortages and transportation problems.

Previously, farmers who participated in the government's acreage reduction program — a prerequisite for receiving price support loans — could exchange only grain grown on their own farms for federal loans.

For example, an eligible farmer who wanted to put his corn under loan would have to transport it to an approved warehouse and swap it for a warehouse receipt entitling him to a government-support loan. Then, he would have to turn around and buy another batch of corn and truck it back to his farm to feed his cattle.

The new program allows that farmer to feed his farm-grown corn to his cattle, alleviating the need for initial transportation, and then buy an equivalent amount of corn and exhange it for a government-support loan.

Another problem that farmers now face is the lack of nearby storage facilities due to the current surplus of grain, meaning they sometimes have to transport their crop hundreds of miles to place it under government loan.

The new program allows farmers to feed or sell the grain produced on their farms and place under loan an equivalent quantity of acquired grain in an approved warehouse, Everett Rank, administrator of the department's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said.

Loans will be based on the rate applicable for the county where the loan grain is stored, he added.

"Producers who wish to take advantage of this change should call their county Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service office," Rank said.

Housing starts slow drastically

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The improvement in the nation's construction industry slowed dramatically last month with housing starts up only 1 percent, the Commerce Department said Wednesday.

Housing starts in October reached an annual rate of 1,122,000 units, the fifth month this year the rate has been above the million mark.

Grain futures

CHICAGO (UPI) — Wheat and oats were lower, corn higher and soybeans mixed at the close Wednesday on the Chicago Board of Trade.
Wheat was off 5 to 2½ cents; corn up ¼ to 1½; oats off 3 to 1¼; and soybeans off 3¼ to up 1 cent.
The market, which was higher most of the morning on good demand, began its decline about noon as commission houses turned sellers in the corn and soybean pits.
Wheat and oat futures moved to lower levels in sympathy with corn and beans.
After liquidating long positions a short-covering rally set in, but when the market could not penetrate the day's highs prices fell once again.

Rate ruling appeal denied

BOISE (UPI) — The Idaho Public Utilities Commission has refused to reconsider a $12.9-million, 15.5-percent rate increase granted to Utah Power and Light Co. in September.

The Salt Lake City utility that serves eastern Idaho customers asked for reconsideration of the rate case, saying it should have received a larger increase, mostly because the company wants to offer a higher return to stockholders than the PUC allowed in the September order.

UP&L argued that the record established in the case showed its investors should be able to earn up to 15.75 percent on common equity, not the 15.25 percent the PUC established as a ceiling.

But the PUC in rejecting the rehearing request Tuesday said the 15.25 percent was sufficient.

Thermal power plan shelved

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Southern California Edison Co. announced Tuesday it will not proceed with the nation's first commercial-sized power plant fueled by underground hot water.

The company said it decided to reconsider the 47-megawatt geothermal project about six miles north of the Mexican border near Calexico, after an Oct. 20 state Public Utilities Commission decision.

The commission ruled the utility's shareholders — not its ratepayers — must assume the bulk of the risk that the cost of the plant — estimated at $146.6 million — will escalate.

Opening lead: Spade king

Today's unusual game was played at the ACBL Summer Championships. If you want to test how well you can decipher puzzles, cover the West and South cards and decide what to do at trick three. If you miss, make-up exams start tomorrow at the ACBL Fall Championships in Minneapolis — all are welcome to kibitz or play.

Former Ace Mike Lawrence (West) led the spade king and shifted to the heart seven at trick two. Dummy's eight was covered by East's nine (Rhoda Walsh of L.A.) and South played a casual deuce. If you were East, would you now lead a spade for another lead through dummy's heart king or would you suspect something fishy?

Rhoda solved the problem with ease. According to the ACBL Daily Bulletin published at each championship, Rhoda explained, "Because I was playing against an expert (Eddie Kantar of L.A.), I knew he had only queen and another. With queen and two others, he would have played dummy's king on the first round to block the suit and maintain control."

So what did Rhoda do when her heart nine held? She returned a low heart to declarer's queen. With no chance to steal a spade trick, declarer fell back on the club finesse, and when this failed, the defenders beat the game by three tricks.
